Atkinson's Saturday Evening Post.

A FAMILY NEWSPAPER, DEVOTED TO LITERATURE, MORALITY, SCIENCE, NEWS, AGRICULTURE AND AMUSEMENT.

Vol. XII. PHILADELPHIA, AUGUST 4, 1832. Whole No. 575.

Written for the Saturday Evening Post.

LIBERTY.

Oh sound of Heaven born light
Thy shining beams unite,
Thy spotless name so white,
Despairs my pen.

To call thee from among
Those dulier words of song,
To pluck thee from the throng,
Eludes my ken.

Since Brutus' day, thy praise
Has caught each poet's lays,
Each limner's purest rays
Were struck from thee.

Thy bud though blown in Rome
Has found o'er ocean's foam,
A trans-atlantic home,
A nation free.

Where thou wast never felt,
No knee o'er thankful knelt,
To expiate the guilt
Of slavery bourne.

Thy living lasting tune
Till time's last shade will bloom,
And find in heaven full room,
Where tyrants mourn.

R. T. W.

THE PLAYTHINGS.

BY MRS OSGOOD.

Oh! mother here's the very top.
That brother used to spin;
The vase with seeds I've seen him drop,
To call our robin in;
The line that held his pretty kite,
His bow, his cup, and ball,
The slate on which he learned to write,
His father, cap, and all.

"My dear, I'd put the things away
Just where they were before:
Go, Anna, take him out to play,
And shut the closet door.
Sweet innocent! he little thinks
The slightest thought expressed
Of him that's lost, how deep it sinks
Within a mother's breast!"

THE TRAVELLER
IN SPITE OF HIMSELF.

In a neat and comfortable cottage in the picturesque village of Bastock, lived a middle-aged gentleman of the name of Samuel Holt. The clean white paling in front of the beautiful little flower-garden before his door, showed he was a man of taste, while the coach-house and stables at the side, showed that he might also be considered a man of fortune. He was in truth in very comfortable circumstances. He had a considerable quantity of land—let to a respectable tenant, for he himself knew nothing about farming—and the rest of his property consisted in about fifteen thousand pounds, which was lent on mortgage to a very wealthy baronet. Mr. Holt might have altogether somewhere about a thousand a year. He spent it in the true style of old English hospitality. His house was never empty; friends, when they came, were so kindly treated, that they found it extremely inconvenient to go away—and what with coursings in the morning, comfortable dinners, pleasant companions, and extraordinary pare-ales, Mr. Samuel Holt was the happiest fellow in the world. His outward man was in exact correspondence to his internal tranquillity. He was stout, but not unwieldy; there was not a wrinkle on his brow; a fine open expression animated his countenance, and there was such a glorious ruddy hue of health upon his cheek, that his friends talked of him by no other name than Rosy Sam.

"Well, my boys," said Rosy Sam, one fine September evening after dinner, "we'll drink our noble selves out—I don't think I ever shot better in my life."

"Your second bird was beautifully managed," said Jack Thompson; "I never saw any gun carry so far except once in Turkey, when the Reis Effendi shot a sea-mew at a hundred and fifty yards."

"With a long-bow, I suppose," said Rosy Sam, who disbelieved every story, the scene of which was not laid in England.

"No, with a long brass gun which went upon wheels."

"Well, well," replied Sam, "it may be all very true; but, thank God, I never saw, and never expect to see, any of them foreign parts."

"You may live to see half the world yet; and if I were inclined to be a prophet, I should say you will be a very great traveller before you die."

"I'd sooner be tried for murder."

"You may be both."

This last was said so solemnly that Rosy Sam almost changed color. He passed it off with a laugh, and the conversation went on upon other subjects connected with Thompson's travels. All the evening, however, the prophetic announcement seemed to stick in poor Sam's throat, and when the party was about to separate for the night, holding the bed-candle in his hand, and assuming a degree of gravity which can only be produced by an extra bottle, he said, "I'll tell you what it is, Jack, here in this cottage have I lived, man and boy, for two and forty years. I never was out of the county in my life, and the farthest from home I ever was, was three and thirty miles. If you mean to say that I am to be a traveller in my old age, the Lord have mercy on me, for a helpless dog should I be among the foreignarians—fellows that can't speak a word of English to save their souls, poor devils—but pah! pah! man, you can't be serious."

"I am serious as a bishop, I assure you. You will travel for several years."

"Pah! nonsense! I'll be d—d if I do—so, good night." The party laughed at Sam's alarm; and retired to bed.

All that night Sam's dreams were of ships and coaches. He thought he was wrecked and half drowned, then that he was upset and had his legs broken by the hind wheel. He woke in a tremendous fright, for he fancied he was on the top of one of the pyramids, and could not get down again. He thought he had been on the pinnacle for several days, that he was nearly dying of thirst and hunger—and on starting up, he found it was time to rise; so he hurried down stairs with the utmost expedition, as he was nearly famished for his breakfast. He was met at the breakfast parlor door by his old servant, Trusty Tommy, who gave him a letter, and said, "This here letter is just come from Mr. Clutchit the attorney. His man says as how there must be an answer immediately, so I was just comin' up to call ye."

"You would have found me knocking about the pyramids," said Rosy Sam, as he proceeded to open the letter.

"Fie, for shame!" muttered old Trusty, "to make use of such an expression. Ah! as good Mr. Drawline says——"

"Devil take you and Mr. Drawline—saddle the Curate this instant, and tell the gentlemen, when they come down, that I am forced to set off on business, that I shall certainly be back to dinner."

In the utmost haste, and with no very pleasant expression, he managed to swallow three or four eggs, nearly a loaf of bread, and half a dozen cups of tea. His horse was soon at the door; he set off at a hand gallop, and left old Trusty Tommy with his mouth open, wondering what in the world it could be that induced his master to such unusual expedition. Mr. Clutchit had discovered that there was a prior mortgage over the estate upon which poor Sam's fifteen thousand was advanced, and their great object now was to get the mortgage transfegred to some unincumbered security. The seven miles which intervened between the lawyer and his client, were soon passed over. Hot, and breathless our poor friend, who was now more rosy than ever, rushed into the business room of Mr. Clutchit. That gentleman, however, was nowhere to be found. On his table Sam saw a note directed to himself—he opened it, and found the following words: "Dear Sir,—By the strangest good luck I have this moment heard that Sir Harry is at present in London. I lose not a moment, as the coach is just starting, to obtain an interview with him there, and should strongly recommend your following by the eleven o'clock coach. Indeed your presence is indispensably necessary. I shall only have the start of you by two hours.—Your obedient servant,—J. C."

Sam threw himself into a chair in an agony of grief and wonder.

"That infernal fellow, Jack Thompson," he moaned out, "is certainly more than human. They say they learn wonderful things abroad. He has learned the second sight. Little did I think two days ago, that I should ever have to hurry so far away from home. London must be seventy miles off at least—oh lord! oh lord! quite out of my own dear county—what is to become of me!"

While indulging in this moralizing fit, the coach drove up to the door—Sam mounted, almost unconscious of what he did, and was whirled off before he had time to recover from his reverie. On arriving in London, night was rapidly closing in. The house where the coach stopt was a very neat, comfortable sort of hostelry in the city, and our honest friend, before proceeding to any other business, solaced himself with the best dinner the hall of fare would allow. After refreshing himself with a solitary pint of port, he set out in search of Mr. Clatchit. But where to find that gentleman was the difficulty; he had left no address in his note to his client, and the people of the inn could not tell where the nine o'clock stage went to in London. They recommended him, however, to apply at various inns—the Dragon, the Swan, the Bull-and-Mouth, and a variety of other great coach caravanserais, the very names of which were utterly unknown to the unsophisticated Sam. Away, however, he went, in total ignorance of his way, and much too independent and magnanimous to ask it. First one street was traversed, then another, and at last poor Sam was entirely lost. His great object now was to retrace his steps; but one turning was so like another, that he could not distinguish those by which he had come, and in the midst of his perplexity, he recollected that he had forgotten to take notice of the name of the inn at which he had dined, and of course could not ask any one he met to tell him his way to it. Tired out by his day's exertions, and very much dispirited, he resolved to go into the first house of entertainment he came to, and resume his search early in the morning. He accordingly went into the next inn that presented itself. He took particular pains this time to impress its name upon his memory. The cabbage leaf was the sign of this tavern, and it was situated at the top of one of those narrow little streets in the neighborhood of the Tower. Honest Sam, it will be seen, had travelled in the wrong direction; but now he was too much harrassed and wearied to recover his mistake. On going into the bar, he was told by the bustling little landlady, that he might have a bed; but they were really so full, that he must submit to share his room with another gentleman. Sam comforted himself with the reflection that necessity has no law, and consented to the arrangement. After a Welsh rabbit, and a glass or two of brandy and water, he was shown to his apartment. His fellow-lodger came into the room nearly at the same time, and Sam was somewhat pleased to see he was of a very decent exterior. They entered into conversation, and his new acquaintance promised, from his knowledge of the town, to be of considerable use in furthering Sam's enquiries after Mr. Clutchit. He, however, told him, that he had some business to transact very early in the morning, and took the precaution on these occasions, especially in the winter, of shaving at night. He accordingly proceeded to shave himself; but poor Sam was so fatigued, that he fell asleep before he finished the operation. On awaking the next morning, he looked to his companion's bed, but it was empty. He had told him, however, that he should rise very early, so he was not surprised at his absence. On setting up and searching for his inexpressibles, they were nowhere to be found. In their place, he discovered those of his late companion, and after many strange surmises, and coming at last to the conclusion that he was robbed, he quietly slipt them on, and proceeded down stairs. His watch he had luckily put under his pillow, and there had not been above two pounds in his pockets; he found a few shillings in an old purse, a pen-knife, two keys, and a set of very fine teeth, carefully fitted up, and apparently never used, in the pockets of the habiliments which were left. These circumstances staggered him as to the predatory habits of his companion; and he resolved to say nothing on the subject, as he had still some hopes of the stranger's making his appearance as he had promised, and clearing up the mystery. He waited sometime after breakfast with this expectation; and at last telling the landlady he should be back at a certain hour, he went out in hopes of falling in with his companion on the street. He walked down towards the river, and gazed with astonishment on the innumerable shipping. Wondering more and more at the strangeness and immensity of the scene, he thought of returning to where he had slept. Just as he was leaving the river, he saw several men go into one of the barges, and begin dragging the shallow part of the water. "What are those men after" said Sam to a person who stood watching their proceedings. "They be dragin' for the body of a gentleman as was murdered last night, and the folks thinks that he was mayhap thrown into the river.—" Dreadful!" said Sam, turning pale at the horrid supposition. "I hope they won't find it; it would be the death of me." And shuddering lest they should pull up a mangled body in his sight, he rushed from the spot. On reaching the inn, he entered it, and was going into the bar, when two stout men rushed upon him, the landlady crying, "That's the man," and threw him down with all their force. One held him by the throat, while the other handcuffed him in a moment. They then hustled him out of the house, forced him into a hackney-coach, and drove off at an amazing pace.

Sam was so much astonished at the rapidity of the whole transaction, that he could scarcely summon breath to ask his conductors what they meant. At last he said, "What the devil can be the meaning of all this? Is this the way to treat a country gentleman?" "How bloody well he sports the Johnnie," said one of the men to the other, without attending to Sam's questions. "He'll queer the beaks if the tide stands his friend, and rolls off the stiffun." "No, there ben't no chance of that," responded the other, "for they've set too so soon with the drags. I'll bet a gallon of gin to a pint o' purl, bedies in his shoes, with his ears stuffed with cotton." "Do you mean me, you scoundrel?" cried Sam, who did not quite understand them, but perceived that they spoke of him rather disrespectfully.

"Come, come, master, none of your hard words; we aint such scoundrels as to Burke our bellifellow, howsomever." At this moment, at the corner of a street, Sam saw Mr. Clutchit, hurrying, as if on very urgent business. He pushed his head out of the window and 'ollo'd—"Clutchit, Clutchit! here's a pretty go!" and held out his manacled hands. But his companions pulled him forcibly back, and he did not know whether his attorney perceived him or not. Soon after this, the coach stopped at a dingy-looking house with iron gratings before the windows. "We gets out here, my covey," said one of the men, "but I dare say, we shall join company again on our way to Newgate."—" You insulting scoundrel," said Sam, "I hope never to see your ugly face again." "No, nor Jack Ketch's neither—but muzzle, muzzle, I say—his worship's been waiting this hour." They then proceeded into a dark room which was crowded with people. They all made way for Sam and his two conductors, till they stood directly in front of three gentlemen in comfortable arm-chairs. "Call the first witness," said one of the gentlemen, and immediately appeared the bustling little landlady of the Cabbage Leaf.—" Is that the man who slept in your house last night?"—" It is, your worship, and little did I think such a bloody-minded villain"——"Hush! answer only the questions that are put to you—about what o'clock was it when he came to your house?"—" About ten o'clock, the rascal"——Here Sam, whose astonishment now gave place to rage and indignation, started up, and said to the magistrates, "Harkee, gentlemen, I'll be d——d if I don't make you pay for this. How dare you"——" Officers, look close to the prisoner;" said one of their worships. "I recommend you, prisoner, to say nothing till the examination is concluded." And Sam sat down again, wondering where all this would end.

"So, your worship; he only had his supper and two glasses of brandy and water."—" He then went to bed?"—" Yes; I showed him up to number nine."—"Was it a single bedded room?"—" No, there were two beds in it."—" Describe its situation?"—"It is just at the top of the first stair, which fronts the side door into the lane."—" Could that door be opened without wakening the house?"—" Yes; we never keep it closed with more than a latch, 'cause of the watermen getting quietly down to the river."—" Was the other bed in the same room occupied?"—" Yes; a gentleman slept in it."—" You saw no more of the prisoner that night. Well, in the morning when did you see him?"—" He came down to breakfast, but seemed very low and uneasy."—" Did he say any thing to you about his companion?"—" Yes; he sighed, and said he was sure he would never come back."—" When did he leave the house?"—" He went down towards the river in about half an hour."—" Very well—you may stand down. Call the next witness.

The chambermaid made her appearance. "On going into the prisoner's room this morning, what did you see?"—" Nothing particular at first. But in a little, I thought the beds and carpet more tumbled than usual. I looked into the other gentleman's bed, and there I saw the sheets and pillow marked with blood."—(Here the witness turned very faint.)—" Well, did you give the alarm?"—" Yes; I ran down and told Misus—but the prisoner had gone out."—" What did you do?"—" We told all the lodgers, and asked if they had heard any noise. One of them, John Chambers, heard heavy steps upon the stair."—" Well, we shall examine John Chambers himself."

John Chambers, on being examined, said that about three or four in the morning, he heard heavy steps coming down the stair, as if of a man carrying a great weight; the side door into the lane was opened, and the person went out. He watched for some time, and heard a stealthy pace going up stairs again; after which he fell asleep, as his suspicions were quieted by the person's return.

A witness next appeared, who deposed, that, having an appointment with Abraham Reeve, the person supposed to be murdered, he proceeded to the Cabbage Leaf, and found it all in an uproar at the suspected murder. Abraham Reeve was by profession a dentist; and had that morning fixed to furnish the witness with a handsome set of ivories.

"Please your worship," said one of the officers who had conducted the unfortunate Samuel to the office, "on searching the prisoner, we found this here in his breeches pocket;" and saying this, he held up a complete set of false teeth.

The magistrates upon this, shook their heads, and a thrill went through the court, as if the murder had been committed before their eyes. The jurors put no more questions to the landlady; and even the evidence of the person whom Sam had addressed by the side of the river, when they were dragging for the corpse, told very much against him. The witness stated that the prisoner turned very pale, when he saw what they were about; and after seeming excessively agitated for a long while, had said, as if unconsciously, "It will be the death of me if they find him."

The evidence, by various concurring circumstances, was rapidly accumulating against the friend. The magistrate cautioned him against saying any thing to criminate himself; and asked him if he wished to make any observation before being remanded on suspicion. Thus adjured, Rosy Sam, who was, alas! now no longer rosy, essayed to speak.

"Upon my honor, this is a most curious business. All that I know about the matter is, that the man who slept with me must have got up very early in the morning, and stolen my breeches. I am a man of fortune—my name is Samuel Holt, Esq. of Bastock Lodge; and as to stealing"—

But his harangue was here interrupted by a new witness, who exclaimed, "Please your worships, this swindler of a fellow cheated me last night out of an excellent dinner and a pint of old port." And poor Sam, on looking round at his new assailant, recognized the pockets of the habiliments which were left. These circumstances staggered him as to the predatory habits of his companion; and he resolved to say nothing on the subject, as he had still some hopes of the stranger's making his appearance as he had promised, and clearing up the mystery. He waited sometime after breakfast with this expectation; and at last telling the landlady he should be back at a certain hour, he went out in hopes of falling in with his companion on the street. He walked down towards the river, and gazed with astonishment on the innumerable shipping. Wondering more and more at the strangeness and immensity of the scene, he thought of returning to where he had slept. Just as he was leaving the river, he saw several men go into one of the barges, and begin dragging the shallow part of the water. "What are those men after" said Sam to a person who stood watching their proceedings. "They be dragin' for the body of a gentleman as was murdered last night, and the folks thinks that he was mayhap thrown into the river.—" Dreadful!" said Sam, turning pale at the horrid supposition. "I hope they won't find it; it would be the death of me." And shuddering lest they should pull up a mangled body in his sight, he rushed from the spot. On reaching the inn, he entered it, and was going into the bar, when two stout men rushed upon him, the landlady crying, "That's the man," and threw him down with all their force. One held him by the throat, while the other handcuffed him in a moment. They then hustled him out of the house, forced him into a hackney-coach, and drove off at an amazing pace.

Sam was so much astonished at the rapidity of the whole transaction, that he could scarcely summon breath to ask his conductors what they meant. At last he said, "What the devil can be the meaning of all this? Is this the way to treat a country gentleman?" "How bloody well he sports the Johnnie," said one of the men to the other, without attending to Sam's questions. "He'll queer the beaks if the tide stands his friend, and rolls off the stiffun." "No, there ben't no chance of that," responded the other, "for they've set too so soon with the drags. I'll bet a gallon of gin to a pint o' purl, bedies in his shoes, with his ears stuffed with cotton." "Do you mean me, you scoundrel?" cried Sam, who did not quite understand them, but perceived that they spoke of him rather disrespectfully.

"Come, come, master, none of your hard words; we aint such scoundrels as to Burke our bellifellow, howsomever." At this moment, at the corner of a street, Sam saw Mr. Clutchit, hurrying, as if on very urgent business. He pushed his head out of the window and 'ollo'd—"Clutchit, Clutchit! here's a pretty go!" and held out his manacled hands. But his companions pulled him forcibly back, and he did not know whether his attorney perceived him or not. Soon after this, the coach stopped at a dingy-looking house with iron gratings before the windows. "We gets out here, my covey," said one of the men, "but I dare say, we shall join company again on our way to Newgate."—" You insulting scoundrel," said Sam, "I hope never to see your ugly face again." "No, nor Jack Ketch's neither—but muzzle, muzzle, I say—his worship's been waiting this hour." They then proceeded into a dark room which was crowded with people. They all made way for Sam and his two conductors, till they stood directly in front of three gentlemen in comfortable arm-chairs. "Call the first witness," said one of the gentlemen, and immediately appeared the bustling little landlady of the Cabbage Leaf.—" Is that the man who slept in your house last night?"—" It is, your worship, and little did I think such a bloody-minded villain"——"Hush! answer only the questions that are put to you—about what o'clock was it when he came to your house?"—" About ten o'clock, the rascal"——Here Sam, whose astonishment now gave place to rage and indignation, started up, and said to the magistrates, "Harkee, gentlemen, I'll be d——d if I don't make you pay for this. How dare you"——" Officers, look close to the prisoner;" said one of their worships. "I recommend you, prisoner, to say nothing till the examination is concluded." And Sam sat down again, wondering where all this would end.

"That infernal fellow, Jack Thompson," he moaned out, "is certainly more than human. They say they learn wonderful things abroad. He has learned the second sight. Little did I think two days ago, that I should ever have to hurry so far away from home. London must be seventy miles off at least—oh lord! oh lord! quite out of my own dear county—what is to become of me!"

While indulging in this moralizing fit, the coach drove up to the door—Sam mounted, almost unconscious of what he did, and was whirled off before he had time to recover from his reverie. On arriving in London, night was rapidly closing in. The house where the coach stopt was a very neat, comfortable sort of hostelry in the city, and our honest friend, before proceeding to any other business, solaced himself with the best dinner the hall of fare would allow. After refreshing himself with a solitary pint of port, he set out in search of Mr. Clatchit. But where to find that gentleman was the difficulty; he had left no address in his note to his client, and the people of the inn could not tell where the nine o'clock stage went to in London. They recommended him, however, to apply at various inns—the Dragon, the Swan, the Bull-and-Mouth, and a variety of other great coach caravanserais, the very names of which were utterly unknown to the unsophisticated Sam. Away, however, he went, in total ignorance of his way, and much too independent and magnanimous to ask it. First one street was traversed, then another, and at last poor Sam was entirely lost. His great object now was to retrace his steps; but one turning was so like another, that he could not distinguish those by which he had come, and in the midst of his perplexity, he recollected that he had forgotten to take notice of the name of the inn at which he had dined, and of course could not ask any one he met to tell him his way to it. Tired out by his day's exertions, and very much dispirited, he resolved to go into the first house of entertainment he came to, and resume his search early in the morning. He accordingly went into the next inn that presented itself. He took particular pains this time to impress its name upon his memory. The cabbage leaf was the sign of this tavern, and it was situated at the top of one of those narrow little streets in the neighborhood of the Tower. Honest Sam, it will be seen, had travelled in the wrong direction; but now he was too much harrassed and wearied to recover his mistake. On going into the bar, he was told by the bustling little landlady, that he might have a bed; but they were really so full, that he must submit to share his room with another gentleman. Sam comforted himself with the reflection that necessity has no law, and consented to the arrangement. After a Welsh rabbit, and a glass or two of brandy and water, he was shown to his apartment. His fellow-lodger came into the room nearly at the same time, and Sam was somewhat pleased to see he was of a very decent exterior. They entered into conversation, and his new acquaintance promised, from his knowledge of the town, to be of considerable use in furthering Sam's enquiries after Mr. Clutchit. He, however, told him, that he had some business to transact very early in the morning, and took the precaution on these occasions, especially in the winter, of shaving at night. He accordingly proceeded to shave himself; but poor Sam was so fatigued, that he fell asleep before he finished the operation. On awaking the next morning, he looked to his companion's bed, but it was empty. He had told him, however, that he should rise very early, so he was not surprised at his absence. On setting up and searching for his inexpressibles, they were nowhere to be found. In their place, he discovered those of his late companion, and after many strange surmises, and coming at last to the conclusion that he was robbed, he quietly slipt them on, and proceeded down stairs. His watch he had luckily put under his pillow, and there had not been above two pounds in his pockets; he found a few shillings in an old purse, a pen-knife, two keys, and a set of very fine teeth, carefully fitted up, and apparently never used, in

He shifted his position frequently in the vicinity of Broad, Enoree and Tiger Rivers, maintaining a continued skirmishing with the enemy, beating up their quarters, cutting off their supplies, and harrassing them by incessant incursions and alarms.

On the 12th of November he was attacked at Broad River by a corps of British infantry and dragoons under Major Weyms. He utterly defeated them and took their commander prisoner. On the 20th of November he was attacked at Black Stocks, on Tiger River, by Tarleton, whom he repulsed after a severe and obstinate action. Tarleton claimed a victory—on which Cornwallis wrote to him "I wish you joy of your success, but wish it had not cost you so much." The loss of the Americans was trifling compared to that of the British, but General Sumter received a wound in the shoulder, that for several months interrupted his gallant career. He was placed, we are told, in a raw bullock's hide suspended between two horses, and thus carried by a guard of his men to the mountains. A few days after, Cornwallis wrote to Tarleton, "I shall be very glad to hear that Sumter is in condition to give you no further trouble: he certainly has been our greatest plague in this country."

On the 13th of January, 1781, the old Congress adopted a resolution of thanks to General Sumter, for his eminent services.

After the battles fought by General Greene, and the departure of Cornwallis for Virginia, General Sumter, who had just recovered from his wound, collected another force, and early in February, 1781, crossed the Congaree and destroyed the magazines at Fort Granby. On the advances of Lord Rawdon from Camden, Sumter retreated—and immediately menaced another British post. Two days after he defeated an escort of the enemy, and captured the wagons and stores which they were conveying from Charleston to Camden. He next, with 350 horsemen, swam across the Santee, and advanced on Fort Watson, but retreated on the approach of Lord Rawdon to its relief. On his return to Black River he was attacked by Major Fraser with a very large force. Fraser lost 20 men and retreated. Having thus cheered the spirits of the people of the centre of the State, he retired to the borders of North Carolina. In March, 1781, he raised three regiments of regulars. His previous enterprises had been executed by militia. He subsequently took part in the military movements in the lower country until the close of the war, and co-operating with Marion, struck many successful blows at the British, and was distinguished in the several actions which were fought between Orangeburgh and Charleston.

After the peace General Sumter was a distinguished member of the State Convention, in which he opposed the adoption of the Federal Constitution, on the ground that the States were not sufficiently shielded by it against federal usurpation. He was afterwards selected one of the five members from this State in the House of Representatives of the first Congress under the Constitution, and continued to represent South Carolina in the national councils until 1803. He uniformly supported the principles of Jefferson, and contributed zealously to their glorious triumph in '98 and '99. He took an active part with the other members from this State, in denouncing a petition for the abolition of slavery, which was presented from the Friends of Pennsylvania. He voted against the reference of the petition to a committee, but Mr. Madison, and other southern members, having respectfully voted for the reference, the committee, though composed partly of northern members, reported decidedly against the petition, declaring that Congress had no power in a matter reserved exclusively to the jurisdiction of the States. In '98 General Sumter was publicly insulted by a federal mob, in the Philadelphia theatre, because he refused to take off his hat, or show some such token of servile respect to President Adams.

For many years the veteran patriot has lived in retirement amid the respect and affection of his neighbours, and lately we regret to learn in limited circumstances. He retained, however, his fine spirit unbroken to the end, and at the age of nearly a hundred years exhibited the cheerfulness and fire of youth. But a few weeks before his death he vaulted into his saddle with the activity of a young man, and the faculties of the mind retained their vigour as well as those of the body.

The elevated course which he has pursued in the present crisis of our liberties, is well known. The spirit of the soldier of '76, glowing unchilled by the winters of a century, has blazed up into a farewell radiance, to light the onward march of his younger compatriots to the vindication of those rights which he periled to establish. He died in the faith of the State Rights and Free Trade Party, animating the zealous to warm zeal,—exciting the listless—shaming the backward—confirming the wavering—and his last exhortation to his young fellow-citizens, like that of his brother in arms, the illustrious Pinckney, is "TO GO ON."

It is to be regretted that after a life so full of heroic and romantic interest as that of General Sumter, the printed records are so meagre and general. It is said that he would himself write no memoirs of his life, and that he was very averse to relating his adventures. We are informed, however, that a gentleman abundantly competant to the task, has been for some time preparing his biography, and we trust that the public will soon receive the benefit of his labours.

ORIGINAL.

THE AMERICAN EAGLE.

I saw him rise from his craggy bed,
And high o'er the mountains soar,
And the pale white tuft on his regal head,
Was the only crown he wore.

Imperial bird! thy course is where
The red winged lightnings play,
And none of thy feathered subjects dare
Follow in thy trackless way.

When Freedom first o'er the western world
His standard of stars and stripes unfurl'd
The eagle came at his high command,
And took the flag from his red right hand.

And nobly the bird discharged his trust:
For the Lion's power he bowed,
And the haughty despot kissed the dust
Wherever his banner waved. AVON BARD.

From the Journal of Health.

MAXIMS FOR THE SEASON.

Keep yourself as cool as possible.—Although we are well aware, that by many, this direction will be treated with ridicule, it constitutes, nevertheless one of the chief means for preserving health during the warm season. It does not imply that you are to live in an ice-house, or to seek for any artificial refrigerant, but simply to avoid all unnecessary excitement whether moral or physical.

Let your clothing be light and loose.—At the same time that this maxim is adhered to, care must be taken, whenever any sudden reduction of temperate occurs, to adapt the clothing to this change, hence, a warmer dress will be required early in the morning and late at night, than during the middle of the day.

When in a state of profuse perspiration, never throw off a portion of your clothing.—The best plan in such cases is to retire immediately within doors, and change the damp clothes for others perfectly dry, the whole surface of the body being previously well rubbed with a towel. The same precaution is proper when you have been accidentally wet by a shower of rain.

Eat moderately of plain wholesome food.—The system demands a much less amount of food in summer than in winter—the sensation of hunger or emptiness should, however, always be avoided; but let whatever aliment is taken be plain, light and easy of digestion. While the ordinary condiments, in moderation, are not improper, stimulating the stomach by food highly seasoned in invariably injurious. It is not true that spices communicate tone to the digestive organs.

Fresh meat, in moderation, is to be preferred in warm weather, to that which is salted, dried or smoked.—It is perfectly absurd to suppose, as some do, that the latter constitutes a more wholesome food in summer than fresh meat. On the contrary, salted, dried and smoked meats, are less nutricious, more stimulating, and less easy of dagestion than fresh meat, consequently, they have a greater tendency to excite and disturb the stomach.

Avoid all unripe, flatulent and acid fruits, and such as are difficult of digestion.—A large number of the bowel complaints, fevers, and cholera, which occur in the warm season, may be attributed to a neglect of this rule. Immoderate eating of any kind of fruit, it may be proper to observe, is injurious to the stomach.

Drink nothing but water.—The experience of the last fifteen years, in almost every climate, and at every season of the year, has shown incontestibly that the water drinker is far less liable to disease of every kind, and especially of the stomach and bowels, than he who makes use of either distilled or fermented liquors. The epidemic cholera, while it has consigned millions of the latter to the grave, has attacked but few who habitually refrain from the use of all intoxicating drinks. During the warm season, and especially during the present summer and autumn, they who wish to avoid an attack of the cholera, will act wisely in making water, toast-water, or an infusion of the slightly aromatic herbs their common drink.

Never drink large draughts of cold water, especially when in a profuse perspiration or when exhausted by fatigue.—Hydrant or river water, that has stood a short time after it has been drawn, drank in moderation, will never produce any inconvenience; and all should recollect, that a small quantity of water leisurely swallowed is far more effectual in allaying thirst, than large draughts hastily swallowed.

Rise early in the morning.—By rising during the summer with the sun, we gain two or more hours, at the most pleasant part of the day, and when exercise and labor can be the most advantageously pursued, while we avoid spending so much time exposed to the enervating influence of a warm bed and a confined atmosphere.

Never walk in the sun without an umbrella.—The shade of an umbrella is a very great protection against the injury which is so liable to result from exposure to the direct rays of the sun. We have often thought that all mechanics who are obliged to labor in the open air would be immense gainers in comfort and in health, were they guarded, in summer, from the sun by an awning or a sied of boards. The additional trouble and expense the erection of such a screen would create would be simply repaid by its good effects.

If possible, remain within doors, during the middle of the day, from twelve to three o'clock.—This maxim might be followed by a larger number of persons than would at first be supposed. Early rising and a diminution of secular holydays, spent too often in dissipation and in incurring diseases which cause the loss of many other days, would make up, mechanics who work in the open air, the time lost by leaving work during the time specified.

When fatigued, or in a profuse perspiration, never lie down upon the ground, or fall asleep in the open air.—By such imprudence the body becomes always more or less chilled, and diseases of a very dangerous character are often produced.

Keep the body strictly clean by frequent bathing.—They who neglect this maxim, deprive themselves of a very powerful safeguard to health, and a source of real enjoyment.

Never use a cold bath when the body is in a state of exhaustion from fatigue or perspiration.—Without entering into a consideration of all the rules to be observed in bathing, we think it important to urge upon our readers the foregoing precautions. Many persons who would hesitate to wet their lips with cold water, plunge their bodies fearlessly into the river, or a cold bath, at a time when from the energies of the system being reduced, the most serious injury is to be apprehended from the chill which invariably results.

Never sleep in crowded apartments, nor with a draft of air blowing upon the bed.—During sleep the system is always more liable to suffer from morbific causes than when awake; hence the impure and confined air of a crowded chamber, and the chill produced by a current of air is far more deleterious during the night than they would be during the day. We wish it to be understood, however, that while we deprecate in the strongest terms, the habit of sleeping exposed to a draft of air, we at the same time insist upon the necessity of a free ventilation of the bed-chamber, which can readily be effected, particularly when the room is sufficiently spacious, and properly constructed, without any infringement of the maxim we have laid down.

To the Editor of the Saturday Evening Post.
New York, August 1, 1832.

THE PESTILENCE.

Thank heaven, the pestilence that has strided with giant steps throughout our fair city, rendering its environs common sepulchres, its cities charnel houses, and its widows, his at length, assumed a mitigated form, and we fervently hope and pray that it is about departing from us. Severely have we suffered from its devastating influence, and painful has been its favor in depopulating our metropolis.

Palatable and distinct has been the finger of God in this awful dispensation, the judgment upon sinful, erring man, he who feels no longer humility—who has ceased to bend his knee in prayer, and who has ceased to be a just and merciful ruler, must be callous to all the feelings of pious gratitude—hardened to the gnanimous ways of the world, without decency, sensibility or refinement.

Although the awful gloom, that has so deeply pervaded our city for weeks, is not yet broken, yet the favourable regions of the state of the public health almost confirm our hopes, and make us confident of a speedy return to previous tranquility and domestic enjoyment and contentment.

The destroyer came upon us in the flushed season of gaiety, when the fond hopes and fervent aspirations of the young were at the highest—when the expectations of the merchant, and the cherished schemes of speculation were about bursting forth in the bloom of their desire. When but one universe the dismay and terrore it inspired to the light hearted and happy—the dread with which it burst alike into the mansion of the rich, and the hovels of the poor—the palaces of the aristocrat, and the huts of the sordid and miserable. But praise be to the providence of God, we have now a consolatory, pleasing and reviving to its application—one that will prove a balm to the hearts of the wounded, and a solace to the sorrowing survived of the wantonness of a tender parent.

Congratulations are exchanged on every side—for days or weeks sunken in depression and the heart long and gallantly bound in affliction, seem to have acquired a new vivification. The step of the the timid and the spirit of the timid seem no longer to quail in passive submission at the late mention of the pest. The look upon it as a misery from which they are being freed—a scourge stayed by an arm stronger in might than these.

As we, in the possibility of a section of the dispensations of God, he has seen fit to visit us but lightly with his doubting epidemic when compared with its progress on the eastern continent. It has visited our port without levity, consuming the numbers to the grave and like a wave and chilling to organs and wan. The impure and the intemperate are awfully admonished of the precariousness of that state.

To the temperate inhabitant—the citizen of regular and abstemious habits it has been divested of much of its terrors. It has however laid its unpalatable hand on some of our worthy tormentors. This can almost inevitably be attributed to error in diet or excessive and fatiguing vigilance in the exercise of duty.

The Rev. Mr. Mallit of our city, has become the mourner of a lovely daughter by the cholera. Thus the lovely fade! Beauty and bloom is of too fragile a nature to the main long of this earth—it seeks the sphere from whence it came—where the lovely fade not and where peace and rest is to be found. METRONE.

N. B.—The Post has brought us the affirmative news of the extension of the pestilence to your hitherto favored city. God grant that such progress may be averted—that your fair metropolis may not become the stage upon which scenes so mournfully witnessed in New York may be enacted.

Our Common Council this morning after a long delay recommend the ensuing Friday, as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer. This is proper, and a just oblation of our hearts on the altar of the ever living God, may tend to restore us to wonted health and activity.

MEMPHIS.—On Tuesday of last week an Indian by the name of John Sweppenet, beat his squaw with his flat, until she died. The outrage was committed near the Tom-pomacks Reservation where they were both drunk. Sweppenet was arrested by his squaw with having stolen some pork, upon which he fell to manslaughter, and she fell down, and, to use his own emphatic language, when explaining the act afterwards, "stopped breathing"—Eclectic Ob.

There is no more striking illustration of the rapid growth of the United States, than the rate of increase of the Post Offices and the Mail routes. The following table shows the increase for regular periods of ten years each, from the adoption of the Federal Constitution. The first column gives the number of Post Offices, the second the amount of miles of Post Roads, and the third the amount of Postage received in the several years mentioned.

	No. Offices.	Miles of Post Roads.	Postage.
1790.	75	1,875	$37,935
1800.	903	20,817	280,804
1810.	2,300	36,406	551,684
1820.	4,500	72,456	1,111,827
1829.	8001	113,009	1,707,418

In 1831, the receipts from postage had increased to $1,997,811, but the number of offices and miles of post route were not given in the Postmaster General's report. That report gives the number of miles as ascertained by the mail annually, and it appears that in the year ending July 1st, 1831, that number was 13,466,642, being an increase of 466,702 miles within the preceding twelve months.

According to the Lancers, many of the Africans take great pride in boasting they are descendants of white men. We find this anecdote recorded in one of their collections. "At Lagosse, we witnessed having overheard a conversation between two men who were quarrelling in the very height of their passion. "What" exclaimed one of them to his fellow, thou pitiful son of a black and dost thou presume to say that a horse was my father! Look at those Christians! for as they are, I am, and such were my ancestors. Answer me not, I say, for I am a white man." The speaker was a negro, and his skin was the color of charcoal."

Evening Post.

Office No. 13 Hudson's Alley, where all kinds of book, pamphlet, and ornamental job printing are executed, at a short notice, on the most reasonable terms. Subscriptions for the Post and Cushee and Journal of Health also received. All post paid letters, directed as above, will be promptly attended to.

THERMOMETER.

		9 o'clock.	12 o'clock.	3 o'clock.
Monday,	July 30	82	86	80
Tuesday,	" 31	83	86	84
Wednesday,	Aug. 1	78	76	76
Thursday,	" 2	73	75	76
Friday,	" 3	60	69	60

The average temperature of the month of June, according to several years observation, is about 65°. The average of June, 1832, was only 69°. The average temperature of July has been about 80°.

A mad dog was chased through Union street on Saturday, by a large number of men and boys. At the corner of Union and Third streets he was knocked down with a brickbat, by one of his pursuers, but after rolling over upon the earth once or twice, he regained his feet and darted down the street again. He turned the corner of Second street, the chase and the cry of "Mad Dog!" still kept up by hundreds. He was doubtless killed in a few minutes—the chances for his life being first indeed. He was a large fine looking black animal, and had bitten one or two dogs in various sections of the city.

A former in the habit of attending our market, arrived on Tuesday night last, with a horse and dearborn, the latter well stocked with produce, containing among other articles, upwards of fifty pounds of prime butter. He put up at one of the inns in Straw berry street, and early on a little later than usual, ascertained that his horse, dearborn and contents had just been taken from the yard. The thief, who had taken the horse from the stable himself in order to save the jingle of the shoes, was subsequently heard of, except through the agency of a market woman, to whom he disposed of all the butter, on what he considered very fair terms. The unfortunate farmer in walking through the market on Wednesday afternoon, happened to cast his eyes on some items that had contained butter, and at once recognized them as his own. They were of course given up, and are all that has been recovered as yet, and we suppose all that there is any probability of getting.

MEMPHIS.—We learn from the Huntingdon Gazette, that Captain William Donnelly, a respectable farmer residing in that county, was murdered in his own residence, a few nights since. The particulars are thus given:—"Near midnight Mr. Donnelly heard a noise in his house, rose from his bed and made for the front door, with a view of preventing the escape of any person from within, and of ascertaining who was without. It is said that when in the act of spanking to arrive power on the outside, he was shot by a monster who had made his entrance into the house. The gun with which he was shot, was loaded with shot, which entered the right side. Mr. Donnelly lingered until Tuesday morning, at one o'clock, when he expired. The villains carried off two rifle guns, which was their only spoil. Parties of armed men have been in pursuit from Williamsburg, Alexandria and Huntingdon, but have not, as yet, met with the slightest success."

The condition of Potter's Field, at New York, is represented as being most dangerous to the health of the inhabitants in that vicinity. It is already filled in several places, with solid masses of coffins, to within two feet and a half of the surface. The tenements within the city go on as usual, notwithstanding the loud demand upon the corporation to prohibit them. They are afraid of their popularity among those, most of whom are a regular charge upon the city.

HOUSTON.—Master Houston is on his way from Washington to his Bastaria, Tennessee. He stopped at Cincinnati. Of his reception in the emporium of the west, the following letter states:

Extract of a letter dated Cincinnati, 7 mo. 21, 1832.

"The conduct of our theatre-going folks last night, has tended in no small degree to predispose them for the reception and other spectacles of Sunday. Sam Houston, Gov. Houston, of club-law memory, having arrived here yesterday morning, was imprudently invited by the managers of the new theatre to attend the exhibition last night, but unhappily the people of Ohio, whose representative he is, so unfortunately beaten, rose indignantly, hissed and hooted him out of the theatre, and scarcely refrained from personal violence. The night was one of great tumult and noise, and by the end of little Houston, not soon to be forgotten.

A new & ingenious method of curing the Cholera when it has reached the last stage, the collapse, was first practised by Dr. Ward, of Leith, Scotland. The proposal of the method was Dr. O'Shaugnessy, of London, consists of pumping into the veins of the invalid, by means of a stomach pump, a quantity of salt and water, and the white of an egg in a state of blood serum, in the hope that near the last struggles of life, were restored by this means. The alum at incredible quantity of forty pounds of this mixture have been forced into the veins in 24 hours. When the patient was near dying ten pounds were pumped in, when he would so far recover as to be animated and would set up and joke. After a short time, if there was a tendency to sinking, more would be applied, until the patient was rescued. In this manner in 24 hours, the above named quantity has been used. It is applied by opening a vein and putting in a small tube, and then working the pump. This method was also practised in Liverpool with success. Dr. O'Shaugnessy was the first had to introduce the use of this plan, from noticing in post mortem examinations of persons who had died of the Cholera, that the blood was deficient, in its natural qualities, of those parts that could be supplied by the above mode of treatment.

In the Crosby street hospital, New York, under the charge of Dr. Rinehander, the above treatment has been tried in three desperate cases. In two it enlivened the sick for a time, but finally sinking, and where reasoning by the disease. In the other patient, a female, it succeeded and she was restored to health.

We understand that the directors of the Almshouse in this city, assembled on Sunday as soon as they heard of the case of Cholera among the inmates of that institution, and passed a resolution to remove five or six hundred of the healthy paupers to the new Almshouse on the west side of the Schuylkill.

An infirmary has been established in Broad near Vine street, and the guardians of the poor direct the admission there of the indigent sick.

We are pleased to learn that the Locomotive Delaware, took the Baltimore passengers, a few days since, across the New Castle and Frenchtown Rail-road, in one hour and three minutes, and brought the return passengers from Frenchtown to New Castle in one hour and ten minutes.—The distance, as our readers are aware, is sixteen miles and a half. The directors of this road have very properly determined to go at no moderate speed, but speed as to insure perfect safety. It is not their intention, therefore, we are informed, to cross the Peninsula in less than an hour, with passengers, though the eminent engineer of the road has announced it practicable to do so with the DELAWARE in twenty minutes, should the occasion require it.

Eliza Freeman, a coloured woman, sentenced to death for the murder of her husband, was lately executed in the neighborhood of Mount Holly, N. J. From three to five thousand spectators were present. On arriving at the gallows, the culprit ascended the scaffold with an unusually firm step, and was followed by the Sheriff and the Rev. Mr. Todd, the latter of whom delivered a very appropriate and affecting discourse and prayer, as nearly as he could, relative to other things, that the culprit appeared perfectly willing to die, as she had just told him that she "would rather die than live any longer," and that she had made a full confession, which she wished published, &c. The criminal then knelt on the scaffold, and offered up a most fervent prayer, by which she prayed that the Lord would protect her children, mother, brothers, and sisters and earnestly requested the multitude present to be warned by her fate, of intemperance, as that was the cause of her act she had committed. At about twenty minutes past two, the scaffold dropped, and she was precipitated into eternity, and apparently died without a struggle.

A LIVE EEL IN THE HUMAN STOMACH.—The following remarkable case is related in the Belfast Republican Journal. Mrs. Hanson, the wife of Samuel H. Hanson, of the town, aged about 21, was first taken ill about two years ago, in a declining state of health, in consequence of what we considered a deranged state of the abdominal and thoracic viscera, originating from Lumbrichus. The symptoms were such as to warrant the conclusion that she was treated accordingly by several scientific physicians, for something like six months, during which time she gradually declined in health, until the system became extremely exhausted and emaciated. About five weeks since, it was ascertained that a living creature of some kind, and of considerable magnitude, actually crawled in the stomach. This was ascertained by placing the hand on the gastric region, when a vigorous squirming motion was felt through the emaciated integuments as well as from her own repeated and positive assertions. It was a question in the mind of her physicians whether in the then existing state of enthusiasm, the system could stand the action of medicine of sufficient power to destroy the animal. After some deliberation and consultation with the husband and friends of the afflicted, together with the urgent solicitations of the patient, it was determined to make an effort, which resulted on the fourth day, in the evacuation of an Eel, (as we believe it length, of the usual size. The skin and flesh was denuded (usually by partial digestion, but the form was sufficiently entire to convince the most incredulous of its identity. She is now in a very low state, under all the symptoms of ulcerations of the stomach and bowels.

She is supposed to have taken it some years since, in drinking from a spring in the evening, at which time she was sensible of swallowing some small substance of very acid consistence.

The medicine given produced very little disturbance to the general system, and was sustained without much increased exhaustion.

The Canadian of the sixteenth instant has the following paragraph:—"Sir. Pasque Vertreza, a voyageur to the Northern posts, informs us that in the beginning of May, a disease broke out among the Indians of Simon Jackson, at a hundred leagues from the sea, which from its symptoms could be nothing but the Asiatic Cholera. An extraordinary vomiting, with diarrhœa and cramps, reduced the poor Indians in four hours of time to that extremity, that they were without strength or movement. Peoples were recovered from this state by a decoction made in equal parts from the bark of White Birch, and the bark of the Epinette, or Leach Fir, boiled together. The quantity to be administered, or the proportion of barks to the water, are not stated, but according to the Canadian it saved every body."

Upwards of sixteen thousand dollars have been collected in New York in behalf of the poor.

THE CHOLERA IN VIRGINIA.—A correspondent of Dr. G. Lefevre, of Baltimore, writes, to him, under date of Monday afternoon, from Norfolk to this effect:—

"Disease, which the physicians do not hesitate to pronounce to be the genuine Asiatic Cholera, has made its appearance in Portsmouth. The deaths from Tuesday last, up to yesterday (Sunday) were twenty-one, principally confined to the black population, eighteen of them having died of that description: one white man (Mr. Thomas, a carpenter,) who was just recovering from an attack of diarrhœa, unprudently drank freely of iced liquors, while overheated;—a man named——Crosbie, a habitual drunkard, and a member of the barracks, habits unknown. Several of the blacks were very old and and debilitated, and had no physician, so that it cannot, with critical accuracy, be affirmed that they died of Cholera, though they were hurried off in 3 or 4 hours. In most of the cases, there were some predisposing causes, such as intemperance or debility, or some act of imprudence, as in eating deleterious food, which might have proved fatal as well with so without the presence of the epidemic. It is remarkable that no fearful an attack of disease should have been made to so proverbially healthy a place as Portsmouth."

Of the blacks who have died, five belonged to Mr. David Reynolds, the proprietor of the Globe inn, in Portsmouth, and two others to a Mr. Burke, adjoining. The deaths in Portsmouth, by Cholera, have been, on Tuesday 2, Wednesday 3, Thursday 6, Friday 2, Saturday 3, Sunday until noon 4. Other cases exist.

THE EFFECTS OF THE VETO.—We learn from Cincinnati, that within two days, after the veto reached the city, building bricks fell from five dollars to three dollars per thousand. A general consternation is represented to have pervaded the city.

An intelligent friend of General Jackson at Cincinnati, states, as the opinion of the best informed there, that the veto has caused a depreciation of the real estate in the city, of from twenty, ten to thirty-three and a third per cent.—Mercantile Gazette.

We find the following paragraph in the Philadelphian, a religious paper edited by the Rev. Ezra Stiles Ely, D. D.—

"THE VETO.—It is with deep regret we announce that the President has put his veto on the bill for extending the charter of the Bank of the United States. Should he survive this Bank, and see it demolished by his hands, we apprehend great disadvantages will result to the currency of these States; and that instead of being longer hailed as a blessing to his country he will be regarded as the author of a wide spread curse.

FROM SMYRNA.

The Viceroy of Egypt declared a Traitor.—The Moniteur Ottoman of May 8th contains a long Imperial Firman, addressed to Hussein Pacha, formally denouncing Mahomed Ali Pacha as a traitor, depriving him of nobility, and consigning him, his son, and all who voluntarily aid him, to the vengeance of all the Faithful. It declares, that all who may fall in fighting these rebels will be regarded as martyrs.

It thus directs Hussein:—"With the assistance of God, you will march my army rapidly to Alepp, and there direct your steps towards Egypt, implacing the support of the Almighty, and the spiritual intervention of the Prophet, run, you and yours, from all parts, against these traitors—seize them, make yourself master of Egypt, respect nothing in respect of Arabs, Turks, from their devastating hands, and orders that mercy be shown to those of their children, relatives and servants, who are not voluntary rebels."

Accounts from Alexandria to May 1st, represent that Egypt suffered much from scarcity of provisions. The Viceroy had ordered his son to resume the siege of Acre, which he was only blockading. Ibrahim has consequently ordered his army back from Beilbos. Acre had not surrendered.

CITY POLICE.

Reported for the Saturday Evening Post.

MONDAY, July 30.—Richard Staffin is a man, who, in his own expressive phrase, likes a drap. He indulges in his cups, however, only on Saturday nights, as through the week he betakes himself, with commendable industry, to his labors, whereby he credibly supports a wife and growing family. Richard's neighbors say of him, in general, that he is as decent as his associates, and that is, in only underrating of this character, when his pockets contain cash and liquor coin. At such times he becomes amazingly crabbed and surly, and when he adjourns from the hotel, next but one to his own domicil, he closes the evening's entertainment by grappling his wife. This feat he performs with great facility, until his patient spouse bethought herself that Richard must be demented, and she cried for assistance. The watch came and found Staffin in the act of putting Mrs. Staffin to bed, in the usual way of doing, no doubt determined to have a quiet house for the least one night. Richard was carried to limbo, where he remained until this morning.

He was fined and bound over.

Reuben Joseph Dumple takes a drop of alcohol also, but it affects him differently. The first cup makes him lively, unassisted, and full of conversation. Catch him at such a moment, and he will discourse you with the slight lisp, for minutes, when he swallows the second. His animation now changes into humour, and for three minutes you will find him a most jolly and roguish companion. Then comes the third cup which finds him still mischievous, but his grammar may now be observed to be defective, and his sentences less smooth. The fourth and fifth cups increase these effects and somewhat dumpen his humour. At the sixth he may be observed to pass from the seventh he becomes decidedly sentimental. If you overtake him on the way home, while holding these seven glasses, you may perhaps find him seated on a fire plug, soliloquizing thus:

"It's a queer world this, full of thorns and gin, and both as bad as another—nobody gets rich but the rogue.—Now there's one, however, Jo Dumple, who I works like a nigger—yes, sir, like a nigger—and what's he? Why, a beggar. The rascally laws conspire to keep the poor—I wish I was Mayor—I'd send all the rich to the workhouse, and keep their money, and have gin half price and decent, at the expense of the street. I wouldn't have I'd drink and fine them what did'nt. Fine a man for drinking! That's worse than burglary, and MAKE impossible. I was fined in one week for a dance—fine for taking horses—headen people for the liquor. Zounks and turnips! its too bad—I'll send in a bill to the state, or else deduct it from my dog tax.—Then I'll have Mr. Richards on the hip, and if he fines me any more I'll sue him for the damages."

Jo Dumple was so overtaken on Saturday, and carried to the watch-house. This morning he resolutely persisted in refusing to pay his fine, and he made atonement by suffering imprisonment.

A young fellow, named James McClellan, took a liking last week to a watch-coat belonging to Patrick Coffee, and determined to make it his own. At the same time, to complete his character he "mounted" the coat, with all possibles, &c. would not be out of place, and he likewise converted them to his own use. He was detected in an attempt to dispose of the coat to Mr. Benjamin Dillahoy, a coloured raw-broker, arrested, and this morning committed to prison.

WEDNESDAY.—Much litigation frequently arises in the Mayor's office, between the watchmen and the grocers, in regard to the quantity of rum which a man may drink without being considered drunk. The term drunk also is an ambiguous one, and great difficulty would be avoided if its meaning were established by statute. It is a matter that might with propriety be brought before the state assembly, where the subject would no doubt be thoroughly investigated.

A genuine toper considers no man decidedly drunk unless he be unable to walk a crack, while others apply the term to a man who has taken his second glass. Between the second glass, and a state of imbecility, there is, as every one knows, usually a wide difference, so that between these points the disputed cases usually occur.

It is amusing to witness the air of surprise and indignation which it seems frequently manifests on being charged with drunkenness, and to hear their exculpatory pleadings. On a fat, unique personage, named Cornelius Owen, was in such a situation this morning. Bustling up, with a great show of contempt for the watch, he commenced.

"Now my lord, what's the matter with you?"

"Yes."

"Well, please you, Mr. Hoffizer, this very beatroordinary thing you should insinuate I was intoxicated, when I'm sure he (hic) knows I never (hic) touch a drop of Holland gin without sweetenin, you know, and that never makes hey man drunk in the hold country, hif hit does etc."

"I should suppose such a mixture would make any one intoxicated."

"Hindeed! Well now I know one Jake Gibleen as drinks brighteen smallers at wonce without hany hexperience of hany wharfare, hand never hiedy as drinks hat hall knows that hegit glasses honly wets one's happetite for dinner. Hat hall events I'm sure that has regards being intoxicated last hevening, the hofficer his greatly has herred."

The watch here stated that Mr. Owen when found was leaning against an awning post for support, being utterly unable to put one foot before the other. He was fined and discharged.

It is remarkable, but not less true, that men occasionally will develope for a time particular traits of character, to which they are, under ordinary circumstances, entire strangers. A whim seizes suddenly upon the imagination, and the unlucky wight becomes possessed of a notion that he is great at this or that feat, a hero, or perhaps, a man of sense. Most persons, when so possessed, make themselves supremely ridiculous. So did Jossey Bostal, when merging from a tavern last night at a late hour, where he had heard many and divers toasts of patriotism recounted by the boisterous, he mistook the notion that he could "lick any man in town."

Jo turned his steps homeward, and thus soliloquized:

"Wonder's like Sprigguns! I can lick lice in two minutes, and lick no fool either. Six blows will do him up. Lord how mad I feel—I can run through a house a mile or jump in a well without touching. I'll have a fight before I go home—I don't I'm engaged and that's in for Pat Coffee as a prince. Where's like Sprigguns—I'd give two and four pence to see him. Hi Sprigguns! like Sprigguns, I say."

"Here I am" says the man, who had been following Jo unawares, "what are you bellowing about, you fool? Shut up, and go home."

"Why like how is it my boy—come here—I feel wolfish, and am going to black your eyes right off. Like we must fight—not for hate, but love—we're old cronies, you know—come, lay off coats."

"Nonsense, Jo, you're loosey—come, lean on me, I'll take you home to your wife."

"Wife! Sprigguns! Curse Gibletts—none of your cheek off, or I'll lick you like fury. Come ready, here's at you——"

With that Jo elevated his fist to the height of Jack's nose, and pushed it pensuasively out, but as the dodged, the blow was spent in the air, and Jo force brought Jossey flat on his face.

"Let up—let up—fair play, my jewel—Oh I'm murdered—murder! fire! gangers!"

And then Jossey Bostal sprattered and floundered until his uproar arrested the attention of a watchman, who upon coming up, and learning the particulars from Jo, who was alin of bursting with laughter, carried Jo off to the watch-house.

He was this morning fined and discharged, and then expiated his paganic whim.

Cholera in New York.

The pestilence in our sister city it will be seen is rapidly declining, and its fatality appears to be much mitigated. We earnestly trust that in another week we shall be able to notice its entire cessation, and the restoration of order and business in the city. We already hear of numbers who are about returning to their residences.

		CASES.	DEATHS.
FRIDAY, July 27th—City, private practice,		73	32
	Hospitals,	46	16
	Bellevue,	3	5
Total,		122	46
SATURDAY, 28th—City,		93	37
	Hospitals,	61	27
	Bellevue,	1	4
Total,		155	68
SUNDAY, 29—City,		61	19
	Hospitals,	60	18
	Bellevue,	1	2
	Brooklyn,	23	7
Total,		145	46
MONDAY, 30th—City,		63	14
	Hospitals,	35	19
	Bellevue,	3	3
	Yorkville,	3	3
Total,		103	39
TUESDAY, 31—City,		59	23
	Hospitals,	52	20
	Bellevue,	1	1
	Yorkville and Harlem,	9	2
Total,		121	46
WEDNESDAY, Aug. 1st—City,		47	13
	Hospitals,	39	24
	Bellevue,	4	3
	Yorkville,	2	1
Total,		92	41
THURSDAY, 2d—City,		47	14
	Hospitals,	34	17
	Yorkville,	10	2
	Harlem,	10	1
Total,		81	34

RECAPITULATION.

Case and Deaths from the commencement to the 6th July,	3235	1395
From 7th July to Aug. 6,	819	339
Grand Total,	4054	1647

INTERMENTS FOR THE MONTH OF JULY.

	Burials.	Cholera Malignant.
Week ending July 7,	191	56
Do. do. 14,	310	136
Do. do. 21,	687	716
Do. do. 28,	879	604
Day ending 8 o'clk. Aug.	197	95
Do. do. 30,	81	47
Do. do. 31,	78	53
Total for July,	2303	1907
Day ending 8 o'clock, Aug. 1,	78	53

SEMI SEM. STATE PRISON.—In the 24 hours ending at noon on Saturday, 30 new cases and 4 deaths, from noon of Saturday to 10 o'clock, A. M. on Sunday 6 new cases and 2 deaths. A letter from the prison, says, the disease is becoming more malignant in its character. In the village of Auburn, it is said, it is decidedly epidemic.

ALBANY, July 17.—New cases this day, 49; deaths 13.—Total number of cases, 518, do. deaths, 158.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—The report of the Essex County District Medical Society, made on Saturday, mentions the death of a woman of Asphyxia on the previous evening, who had left New York two weeks before. Her husband on his return on the same day and had not died when the report was transmitted. He had been addicted to habits of irregular habits who had been confined in the debtor's jail, Newark, for three weeks, died on Saturday morning, after being seized. In consequence the Sheriff released the other prisoners on his responsibility. The special Sessions released on bail those detained for criminal offences, and the Jail is now free from inmates. Two deaths occurred at Ausuckanosck, on the 30th and 31st. The survivors of the sufferers were Messrs. O. and Isaac M'Kane, both from Harlem, New York.

MONTREAL, July 25.—We regret to announce that there is some alarm of cholera prevailing, and great portion of them proves fatal. Yesterday, James Stanley, Esq., of the Court of King's Bench, died, soon after, Sir. Chd. the plumber, died.

The disease among the Military since the encampment have been—15th Regiment at Montreal, 97; Laprairie, 8; Coteau du Lac, 2; Quebec, 2—38. Deaths among the two companies of the 24th Regiment at Montreal, 7; total, 46.

The disease has not spread to the country, which exceed 450 at the commencement of the cholera; consequently the deaths among the military, exceed one in ten in the short space of ten days.

About 1st of June, the troops were removed from the city to the Island of St. Helions, since which time, no case of cholera has occurred, and only three deaths from ordinary complaints have taken place on the island.

AT BALTIMORE, Cholera Cholera—on Tuesday at 4 p. m. 25 new cases are set down for the last 24 hours, and 10 deaths.

AT TROY, N. Y. on the 30th, there were reported to the Board of Health for the four days since the 26th, 7 new cases and 6 deaths.

A letter to the editors of the Albany Daily Advertiser, dated Troy, July 31, says, "There have been 15 new cases of Cholera and 4 deaths for the 24 hours ending on that day at

ATKINSON'S SATURDAY EVENING POST.

PHILADELPHIA:

Saturday, August 4, 1832.

LITERARY PREMIUMS.

The publisher of the Casket, a monthly periodical of Literature, Fashions, Belle-Lettres, Science, Music and the Arts, with the view of increasing the attraction of the new volume of that work, to be commenced on the first of January, 1833, and at the same time to aid the cause of American Literature, offers the following premiums for original compositions.

100 DOLLARS

For the best original Tale, founded on scenes connected with American History.

50 DOLLARS

For the best original Essay, on any subject within the scope of moral philosophy or science.

25 DOLLARS

For the best original Poem, not exceeding seventy lines; the subject left to the discretion of the writer.

The articles placed in competition for the premiums will be submitted to the following named gentlemen, who have consented to act as judges and award the prizes.

ROBERT MORRIS, Esq. Editor Pennsylvania Inquirer.
CHARLES NAYLOR, Esq.
ROBERT T. CONRAD, Esq. author of "Conrad of Naples."
JOSEPH PARSONS, M. D.
BENJ. MATTHIAS, Esq. Co-Editor Saturday Evening Post.

All communications to be forwarded (post paid) to the office of the Casket, No. 12 Hudson's Alley, Philadelphia, on or before the 1st December next. The premiums will be awarded as soon after as possible, that one or more of the successful pieces may appear in the January No. of the Casket. Address SAM'L. C. ATKINSON, Pr.

Philadelphia, Aug. 4, 1832.

☞ Editors with whom we exchange may aid the cause of literature by inserting the above.

To Readers and Correspondents.

The favor from our esteemed and talented correspondent L. H. M. is received, and will appear shortly.

The article headed "Cholera," seems to us unsuited to the times. Nothing, in our opinion, should be said, or written upon the subject, unless it be directly to the point, and calculated to promote good. Above all, jesting articles should be carefully suppressed.

"B. B's." picture of a great man may be correct in a solitary instance, but its publication would, we believe, be highly injudicious.

WATCOS must excuse us.

ASHTON may spare himself the trouble of concluding his tale.

Oscar is on file.

"The son of a constant subscriber," has had but little to do with mercantile transactions, to remain so long ignorant of matters so easily comprehended, as those to which he alludes in his communication. Through our columns we cannot satisfy his inquiries, as it would be supererogation to repeat what all know. We refer him, however, to the first volume of Carey's Encyclopedia Americana, where, under the proper head, he will find the information he desires.

A writer in a New York paper complains to the Board of Health of that city, of the hasty interments of persons supposed to have died with the Asiatic Cholera. He says: Social principles of physiology, as well as many experiments, must have convinced us, that, with the exception of a decided putrefaction of the body, there is no sure sign of death; and that all other phenomena of a body, supposed to be dead, are uncertain and fallacious. The truth of this, which every well informed physician will admit, must have a still greater bearing in a disease, where the chief symptoms consist in Asphyxia, a word, the meaning of which expresses the absence of the pulse, as proof of a suspended circulation of the blood. It is unnecessary here to quote cases in which persons, although rarely, have been interred alive, or narrowly escaped such horrid fate, nor even into minute scientific argument, to prove that the original character of the Asiatic Cholera consists in an affection of that branch of the nervous system, which presides over the vital and animal functions, and that, therefore, the irritability of the muscles, previous to their total exhaustion, often for a length of time remains after death, as proved by a great number of observations of muscular spasms in the bodies of those who have actually died of Asiatic Cholera.

The writer refers to some instances, in Europe, in which persons have been buried alive, and urges the Board of Health to allow all bodies to remain uncovered, at the place of interment, for several hours, until undisputed signs of putrefaction are apparent.

The daily papers contain a call for a Town meeting on the Presidential Question, signed by about two thousand naturalized Irish citizens, who have heretofore supported Gen. Jackson, but who now, in consequence of the late veto, pledge themselves to oppose his re-election. The meeting is to be held on Monday afternoon, in Independence Square.

THE INDEPENDENCE OF THE PRESS.

The freedom of speech and the independence of the American press are subjects which circumstances frequently call up for discussion in the newspapers of the day, but the dissertations thereon are seldom of a character calculated to satisfy the inquiries of a reflecting mind.—The term, independence of the press, is explained in a variety of ways, by different editors, few of whom are sufficiently liberal in their sentiments to give a correct definition. As the subject is at this time one of interest, we propose to instance some examples of this diversity of opinion. We begin with

The Jackson editor, who interprets the phrase "Independence of the Press" to mean, the privilege of vilifying and abusing every prominent member of the opposition with impunity, of imputing to honest and patriotic men, base, sordid, and improper motives; of raising the cry of "intrigue, bribery, and corruption," against opponents, whenever "intrigue, bribery and corruption" become the distinguishing features of the administration; of bawling "glory, honor, gratitude," whenever the cause of his candidate begins to sink, and of sacrificing honor, virtue, decency, and principles, as often as the exigencies of the party require such a course. The Jackson man, in addition, thinks that an expression of opinion on politics, favorable to his views, by a neutral editor, "as worthy of all attention," but if dissenting, no matter how correctly, as an evidence that the Clay flag is about to be hoisted, and he accordingly feels himself obliged, by every principle of duty to his employers, "to rap" the astonished lubbermobbed "over the knuckles," ours exemplar. Another peculiar feature in his opinion is, that his security in his own beloved commonwealth to the patronage he receives from government. If public pay be dealt out to him sparingly, he has occasional misgivings of conscience, but if it come in larger quantities, it has an astonishing effect in induci g him to believe his political division, an honest and upright one.

The Clay editor explains the phrase to mean—the prerogative of expressing the inspired or sacred sons of the Jackson party, in his own peculiar way. The privilege to denounce every movement of "the powers that be," as a political scheme to gain strength to cry out lustily "abuse of power!" "towards and punishments" to ridicule the judgment and learning of the executive, criticise the bad grammar in his messages, and unduly impugn his patriotism. He also assumes it to mean the preaching up of "war, pestilence, and famine," to the great terror of the commonwealth at large, and that it calls upon him to "clear, and loud" every dissent speech of the calmer members, as well as to charge the whole party with inconsistency, especially as relates to the Bank and Tariff questions. The Clay editor in his dilemma frequently interlaces such words as "Ruin is command," "Dictator," "King Andrew," &c. as if it were the intention of the Jackson party, to apply the terms to their leader.—He boldly asserts that the existence of the American nation depends upon a change in the government, and that the hopes of every patriot are identified with the success of his candidate.

The Anti-masonic editor takes a different view of the independence of the press. He laughs ready to burstin at his Jackson and Clay neighbors, and is pleased beyond measure when they get at loggerheads. He asserts boldly that those presses only are independent, who publish an account of "Morgan's murder," and copy weekly extracts from "Bernard's Light on Masonry." Instead of "corruption" he cries out "Lodge resolutions"—instead of "sedition of slavery" "bad roads and cobbles," and in the place of "famine and pestilence," "most worshipful and grand master." He is tolerably civil to those who "let well enough alone," but he has a remarkable fondness for the term "Jack," which he applies indiscriminately to all who offer dissenting definitions.

Editors who eschew politics, and confine themselves exclusively to serving up "food for the mind," have two general definitions of the phrase—independence of the press.

The old school party have a strong predilection for the old country, and the works of foreign writers, with which they are constantly filling their papers. American authors they criticise with great severity, exposing all their weak points, and, whenever possible, converting the "sublime" into the "ridiculous." They are continually asserting at the other school, for which in return they are treated with the term aristocratic. The English literati they regard as the legitimate source of all learning, and they think those presses only independent who have the temerity to say so. Upon eminent statesmen, acute diplomatists, great financiers, victorious heroes, and skilful negotiators, they place small value, holding out the idea that talented writers and distinguished authors, are the only true objects of applause and renown, and these latter, they unhesitatingly assert, are worthy of all praise and honor.

The antagonist school dissent from this in toto, and in accordance with their notion of "independence," abuse every thing that comes from across the water. Bryant, Willis, Whittier, Cooper, Flint, &c. they boldly assert, are greater geniuses than were Shakspeare, Young, Addison, Pope, Byron, Scott, &c. and much time and space is devoted to make this proposition clear. Against the London Quarterly, New Monthly, &c. they have an instinctive abhorrence, and to gratify their spleen they fill their weekly journals with namby-pamby tales, and love-sick poesy, the production of American sentimentalists. Some other of their notions are ineffably singular.

Religious editors have as many definitions of the phrase as there are sects of christians. Their difference of opinion it is not necessary to notice, except to say that each strongly imperceptive his views with the doctrines of his sect, to which, under all circumstances, he pertinaciously adheres.

From these definitions, which, if too vividly drawn to be correct in all cases, are unquestionably so in many instances, we entirely dissent in opinion. To our own views, which we shall here append, as the principles of Neutral Editors, we ask the deliberative opinion of every reflecting reader.

The Neutral editor, having higher and more important matters than party squabbles to claim his attention, notices only those questions of national policy which affect the interests of the nation at large. With all true patriots he regards the Constitution as the legitimate authority of the land; he recognises the JUDICIARY as the correct interpreter of the laws, and the PRESIDENT as the agent of the people to fulfil them. To the LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL he looks up with respect, and so long as they are guided by patriotic motives, though they err in judgment, he lends them a support. But when the President or the legislative council palpably usurp authority, he considers it the exclusive prerogative of the neutral independent press, to hold up their acts to the people for correction.

Upon literary and local matters, as well as all others within the sphere of a public journal, he is governed by truth, American feeling, and a disposition to promote—to the extent of his ability—the public weal, and the advantage of his fellows. These considerations sway all others, and especially in politics, lest his remarks should be considered as intended to bias his readers, his individual preferences are carefully withheld. This, on general principles, he regards as the correct meaning of the phrase—the independence of the press.

It is in accordance with this definition—to which we strictly adhere—that we call the Poor an independent press. Being unshackled by party feeling, we take no interest in the party squabbles of politicians, but speak of national subjects, as we think befits us as Americans, warmly devoted to our country. Occasionally the friends and opponents of the administration come in collision with our views, but as we support principles, and not men, our course never changes, and they are in fault. Some fastidious editors affect to believe that even upon such subjects as the union, the tariff and the bank, neutral editors should at all times be silent, but with the same propriety would they be silent upon such topics as American freedom, our national anniversaries, and the institutions of our country. The former questions, like the latter, are identified with the preservation of American interests, and when assailed by danger no pen should be idle, no tongue quiet.

It is upon patriotic editors, unconnected with party politics, that the task will one day devolve, of rescuing our country from the horrors of anarchy, confusion and civil war, created by the hot-headed and unprincipled politicians, who now clamor so fiercely against the Veto. The course they pursue is calculated to stir up all the vindictive passions of the human breast, and the violence of their strife, and the base subterfuges to which they resort, can scarcely fail of producing such an appalling result. Let them think deeply of their position, and repent of their errors!

Least of all have they a right to complain of the adherence of neutral papers to American principles, whose powers of abuse are purchased for the attainment of a certain object. The characteristics of such political presses are disgraceful to humanity. Established for a brief period, by irresponsible but interested persons, whose god is gold, their unprincipled course of operation becomes each day more base and shameful, as their hour of dissolution approaches. No untruth is too villainous to propagate—no merit too valuable to be assailed. In their own filth they revel, and no one passes without being bespattered with their mire. The cast of such is oblivion should be hastened, and over their ashes a monument of infamy erected, with the motto—"So perish the enemies of America."

The Canadian Record, published at Montreal, contains an article warmly applauding the conduct of the President in vetoing the United States Bank bill. The English editor advances some curious reasons, in support of the position taken by the President, which, considering the source, are much to the point. He asserts, virtually, that a sound wholesome currency is not necessary for the United States, and that the tendency of all banking institutions, ostensibly established for public good, is to "aid the insidious encroachments of power upon public freedom." These "insidious encroachments," we take leave to infer, are less obnoxious to the loyal writer than is an institution which, by its generous assistance to the western states, has deprived our Canadian brethren of some of the advantages which they enjoyed from intercourse with the population on our borders, previous to its establishment.

The editor also remarks that he shall be "much surprised, if the Bank does not assert and maintain its claims for a renewal of its chartered privileges with the most unblushing effrontery." The Record undoubtedly makes this assertion not knowing the character of the President and directors of the bank. Such an imputation uttered in the United States, would be regarded as a libel. The course pursued by the Bank has ever been high minded and honorable, and the present excitement in regarded to the Veto, arises not from the managers of that institution, but from disinterested citizens of all political parties, deeply convinced of the essential importance of the bank to the best interests of the country.

By the subjoined paragraph, which we find in the Philadelphia Gazette, it would seem that in the lower part of the city there is still room for the adoption of preventive measures in reference to the cholera:—

"We were told on Saturday, by a gentleman acquainted with the fact, that in some of the streets in Southwark, which run from the Delaware to the Schuylkill, there are many of the housekeepers of the lowest order, that have long made it a business to take in lodgers, who tarry for a night, at the very moderate price of one cent per head! On some occasions, these people collect an aggregate of seventy-five cents; that is, they have their apartments filled with that number of sojourners, earthenware paying his individual cent for repose through the night. Recently, a watchman, while taking his round, observed the door of one of these cheap lodging houses wide open, and the landlady sleeping on the threshhold, with her head alone housed. The guardian of the night awoke her, and remarked that she obstructed his progress. The hostess delivered a most tempestuous rejoinder; observing, among other things, that her house was full, and that she was willing to make some personal sacrifices of convenience, for the benefit of her sonnumerous patrons—some two scores of whom were at that moment snoring melodiously on the floor within."

The Cholera in this City.

The Eastern scourge, we regret to say, has been daily extending its ravages in Philadelphia. As yet the number of victims have been few, compared with the number that perished in New York, at the breaking out of the disease, and we consequently have still strong hopes that its desolating influence will not be severe or widely extended. The cases so far, without, we believe, an exception, have occurred in the less cleany parts of the city, and the persons afflicted have been only those whose previous conduct had been highly imprudent. The following are the official reports of the board of Health.

	CASES.	DEATHS.
SATURDAY, July 28th.—City and Districts	1	0
Hospitals	5	4
Total	6	4
SUNDAY, July 29th.—City and Districts	4	1
Hospitals	1	0
Almshouse	1	0
Total	6	1
MONDAY, July 30th.—City and Districts	8	6
Hospitals	6	1
Arch Street Prison	1	0
Total	15	7
TUESDAY, July 31st.—City and Districts	5	2
Hospitals	9	5
Almshouse	5	2
Total	19	9
WEDNESDAY, Aug. 1.—City and Districts	16	5
Hospitals	5	3
Almshouse	1	1
Total	22	9
THURSDAY, Aug. 2d.—City and Districts	8	3
Hospitals	14	9
Almshouse	5	2
Arch Street Prison	13	1
Total	40	15
FRIDAY, Aug. 3.—City and Districts	13	4
Hospitals	13	5
Almshouse	5	1
Arch street Prison	4	4
Total	35	14

RECAPITULATION.

Number of cases of Asiatic Cholera, in Philadelphia, reported previous to 28th July.	5	4
From July 28, to August 3	152	59
Grand Total	157	64

We are happy to have it in our power to say, that but little alarm appears to prevail in our city. Business and social intercourse is continued as usual, though every prudent caution, calculated to prevent the encroaches of the disease, is generally adopted. Our citizens have confidence in the skill and attention of the Medical Faculty, as well as in their own temperance and care, and there seems no probability at present, that any thing like a panic will be created.

Among the unreflecting part of the community we hear that some feeling has been excited, in regard to the supposed improper conduct of persons in charge of certain hospitals, but so far as we are informed, probably without just cause. The individuals who have been selected to preside over the Medical Department of these institutions, are persons well known in the sections in which they reside, and having their characters at stake, they will, of course, be careful that their operations be such as will bear the scrutiny of close examination. There's is an important and responsible station, to fill which creditably will call into service all the knowledge, experience and judgment of which they are possessed.

It may well be questioned, however, whether the publication of minutes of medical experiments on cholera patients, is likely to affect any good object. The probability is strong, that those essays, being read by those who cannot fully understand the object and result, will be regarded as evidences of a disposition to trifle with the afflicted poor, or that they will communicate the idea that our physicians remain ignorant of the disease, and the principles of cure. We say this with great deference, as the subject is one upon which we do not feel at liberty to speak at length. Our motive in referring to it at all, is, that care may be taken by our physicians not to inflame the minds of the sick and suffering, by the publication of medical experiments which cannot, in the slightest degree, benefit the public at large. Valuable information in regard to the disease, as well as the result of new applications of remedies to patients, can be communicated to the Faculty, without so open an announcement.

That we may be fairly understood, we state that the matter to which we particularly allude is connected with the system of injecting the veins of Cholera patients, recently introduced in New York and this city. Of this operation, as a means of relief, we are not conversant with sufficiently well to be able to give an opinion, and if we were that would not be our business. But we are sensible that so important a point of medical practice, cannot be made sufficiently clear to the understandings of all, to render newspaper essays thereupon advisable or proper, and in view of this fact, that those, who, if affected, must depend upon hospital aid, will likely imbibe prejudices against it, which may lead to unpleasant results. We therefore, repeat, that our physicians require the exercise of as much caution as any other portion of the community.

The second track of the Philadelphia and Norristown Rail-way is completed as far as Church Lane, and will probably be put in operation in the course of a few days. The travelling upon the last track has been considerable, and excursions of pleasure by our citizens would probably be much more frequent, if the managers were more peremptory in enforcing good order on the cars. A choice of company, we are aware, is not at all times possible, and to conveyances of this kind, respectable persons are at times thrown in connexion with the obscene and vulgar. Imperticence from such, should, however, be intently treated as well as smoking and obscenity in the presence of ladies, under any circumstances—by decisive regulations of the company. A distinct public avowal of a determination on the part of the managers to ensure their passengers a freedom from annoyance would perhaps be alone sufficient.

We make these remarks because we were witness, on Monday last, to the rude behaviour of certain individuals in the presence of a number of respectable ladies. A just punishment for their ill breeding would have been a forcible ejection from the situation they occupied on the top of the car.

Mr. Gordon, druggist and apothecary, at the corner of Race and Third street, has for sale Strengthening or Preventive plasters, which, at the present time, are strongly recommended by physicians, to be worn as a protection to the stomach. It is said that they afford a protection to the system which can scarcely be obtained in any other way, and as a preventive of Cholera and bowel complaints, they are regarded as highly serviceable. They have already been procured by a vast number of citizens, as whatever difference of opinion may prevail as regards their positive virtues, all agree that their use can be attended with no injury. A friend declares that he was benefitted by one of them in two hours, while suffering from an attack of diarrhœa.

The use of these pitch plasters was ordered by the Austrian and Prussian governments with great success. It is said that of 10,000 persons who wore them, not one was attacked.

Jesse Torrey, Jr. Esq. well known in this community as a zealous philanthropist, has just published a dissertation on the causes, preventives and remedies of Plague, Yellow Fever, Cholera, Dysentery, and other pestilential, epidemic, or contagious diseases, which he respectfully submits to the consideration of the medical faculty, and the community at large. The pamphlet also contains outlines of a new physiological system of Medical science and practice, which the author asserts is predicated upon the known laws of nature and chemical affinity. Mr. Torrey, in his preface, asserts that for a number of years past he has made the above subject a point of serious consideration and research, and his labours, therefore, will probably be of some advantage to the cause of science. The work evidences much industry and chemical knowledge. It may be obtained of Grigg & Elliot, No. 9. N. 4th street.

Rock Woods of Liberia.—"What's the land?" "Bean." "The atmosphere?" "Frogs." "What did you live on?" "Hoes." "What were you drought animals?" "Bugs." "What did you build your houses of?" "Logs." "Any fish in the ponds?" "Frogs." "What did you find the women?" "Clogs." "What men did you travel by?" "Slogs."

POPULAR LITERATURE.

The August number of Atkinson's Casket, the contents of which we publish in another column, we commend to our readers as possessing greater interest than usual. The steel engraving prefixed—a lady at toilet—the design of which is highly interesting, is executed with the skill of a master, and embraces all those points in a fine engraving, which render it at once valuable, pleasing, and effective. Among the wood cuts is a representation of the interior of the splendid Catholic Cathedral, at Baltimore, and a view of the romantic scenery at Harper's Ferry, Va., taken from Jefferson's rock. Both are from the hands of a skilful engraver.

The original papers in the number, are rich and spicy, and embrace dissertations on a variety of subjects within the scope of popular literature. The selected articles are numerous, and of an interesting character. Not the least attractive is a full account of the mutineers of the ship Bounty, as detailed by Captain Beechy, in his recently published narrative. Persons desirous of subscribing, may examine the work at our publication office.

JOURNAL OF HEALTH.—No. 22 of the periodical is just published. The following are the contents:—

Warning; Effects of a belief in Contagion; Maxims for the Season; Ignorant Cholera Doctors; Wise Drinking in France; Character of a true Physician; Courage a Preventive of Disease; Influence of Mental Affections; The Fatal Nuptials.

Terms $1.25 per annum, in advance. Subscriptions received by agents of the Post, and at the publication office, No. 12 Hudson's Alley.

Bicknell's Reporter and Counterfeit Detector, was issued on Monday last, on an enlarged sheet, and in an improved form. It is a remarkably neat periodical, and the objects to which it is principally devoted, render it an important paper to merchants, traders, and others who handle money. Mr. Bicknell, in his editorial course, is enterprising and liberal, as all editors should be, and so far his exertions have met the approbation of his patrons and the public generally. We trust he will have no cause to regret the improvements he has recently introduced in his journal.

The recent departure of Joseph Bonaparte for France, is surmised to be connected with some important political movement, about to be made in that country. The Count's determination to leave America, it appears, was made hastily, and it would seem was decided upon from some communication made to him by a strange French gentleman who arrived at Bordentown, a few days before his departure. The property of the Count and the management of his affairs, have been entrusted to a gentleman of this city, who usually spends his summers in Bordentown.

The Board of Health, with commendable decision and promptness, has set about a measure better calculated than any other to prevent the spreading of disease and to ensure the repose of the citizens. The Cholera, having appeared in Small street, which runs from Fifth to Seventh, between Shippen and Sloth, inhabited by low blacks, with a slight mixture of whites, the Board has had a number of workmen employed on Wednesday and Thursday, in cleaning out and fencing up the Square from Fifth street to Sloth, which is known to be one of the most filthy in the City and Liberties. Sufficient provision has been made for the comfortable accommodation of the persons required to move. Shanties or huts are building in the Race street Potter's Field, near Schuylkill Fifth street.—The building used for the Old Water Works, in Chestnut near the Schuylkill, is fitting up for the reception of decent white people, in case any such should find it necessary to leave their dwellings.

When the Yellow Fever was last here, it was effectually stomped by closing what was called the Infected Districts near the Delaware.

Communicated.

CHLORIDE OF SODA.

I was much pleased with a favorable notice of Geo. M. Carpenter's Liquid Chloride of Soda, in the Evening Post of last Saturday, and was induced to procure some of it, for several of the purposes for which it was recommended, and am pleased to find it proved highly satisfactory in all the experiments which I made with it. As a disinfecting agent it is superior to any other article yet introduced, and also one of the most powerful agents for the instantaneous disinfitation of the most offensive odor of animal or vegetable decomposition. The pestilential epidemic which has already traversed three-fourths of the globe, carrying death and desolation in its progress, has at length visited our own city. It originated, no doubt, from an impure atmosphere, and is evolved from local causes in the various places in which it has yet occurred. While its influence has been severely felt in New York, for the last three weeks, Philadelphia has been comparatively exempt from distress, but few cases have yet occurred, and those confined chiefly to persons of dissolute and intemperate habits,—and we may attribute this favorable condition solely to the judicious regulations of our city authorities, in co-operation with the sanitary committees, by an efficient cleansing of our streets and alleys, and a strict examination of the dwellings, public buildings, and manufacturing establishments, requiring all to be thoroughly cleared, which were the most efficient regulations which could possibly have been adopted, as precautionary means to keep off the disease, or to mitigate its malignant character. There were a number of places discovered in this city, where the disease no doubt can this would have broken out and spread, had not these regulations been enforced, inasmuch as the wretched occupants crowded together in filth and misery to leave the premises, for the purpose of having them thoroughly cleansed and provided with healthy situations. With these precautions and the free use of the Chloride of soda (which should be diluted and fine) in every family, and a strict attention to temperate diet, and clothing adapted to the vicissitudes of our climate, our city would no doubt continue in uninterrupted health. We think the chloride of soda cannot be too strongly recommended in every family during this impending visitation; the discovery of it was considered so important in France, that 3,000 francs were awarded to Labarraque and Laugier, Massuyer, by the Royal Institution. We are pleased to learn that Mr. Carpenter's preparation is made double the strength of Labarraque's disinfecting agent.

Nitrous Chlorine has been recommended as possessing the power of destroying infectious effluvia, but its smell is of a suffocating nature, and so irritating to the lungs that the greatest caution must be taken not to inhale it in any quantity. In the chloride of soda it is so gradually evolved as not to occasion inconvenience, and it may thus be exposed in the chambers of the sick without the slightest inconvenience. Unpleasant exhalations are instantly neutralized by this salutary process, contagion checked, and a pleasant freshness communicated to the air, which does not merely cover disagreeable smells, like common fumigations, but effectually destroys them.

There is reason to believe, from actual experiment, that the contagion of the plague itself may be stopped by these preparations. The process is neither expensive, troublesome, nor unhealthy, and is perfectly within the reach of the poorest of the community. In no case can it be productive of any injurious effects, and he who is acquainted with the fact, is guilty of the greatest negligence, if he does not use every resource to such simple and effectual means of prevention, even in cases of the slightest suspicion.

July 31, 1832. MERCUS.

EPITOME OF THE TIMES.

On Tuesday the 24th ult. Mr. John Beyer, of Norristown, Pa. came to his death almost instantaneously. Mr. Beyer mounted an old wall near his mill, for the purpose of removing the same. He had hardly commenced throwing down the top stones, when the wall gave way. He endeavored to extricate himself from his prison situation by jumping, but alas! was overtaken by a piece of timber, which dreadfully fractured his skull.

A man named Archibald S. Armstrong, was arrested in the neighborhood of Lexington, Ky. a short time since, charged with passing counterfeit money. Several hundred dollars in counterfeit notes were found upon his person.

The butters of Philadelphia sent to the Hon. Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, early in July, a splendid drab beaver hat, which they had caused to be made expressly for that purpose. It was presented on the Fourth.

The Clergy of Washington and Georgetown having agreed to observe the first day of August as a day of fasting and prayer, the Mayor of the former place concurs with them in recommending that day, and inviting the citizens to a general observance of it.

Mr. John Heilsflinger, of Vincent township, was drowned in Beaverdam creek, near Westchester, Penn. while engaged in fishing, on the 21st ult.

Among the donations for the relief of the suffering poor of New York, during the present hour of distress and peril, received by the Committee last week, was the sum of $100 by the Hon. John Sergeant, of Pennsylvania.

The Pittsburg lost the Piedmont route through Virginia. He left Orange court House on Wednesday morning last.

In order to promote the cause of temperance in the American Colony at Liberia, the importation of ardent spirits is only allowed under a heavy duty, and the exchange of a pipe to retain it so high as to amount to a prohibition.

CHOLERA AT NAPOLEON.—The Baltimore, Cincinnati of Tuesday says:—We learn by the steamboat from Nashville last night, that four deaths by cholera were reported there on Monday.

QUARANTINE.—The same paper states, that "all vessels from ports beyond the Chesapeake Bay, or from Norfolk, must be examined by the Health officer; and if the captain or pilots would run near to the flag boat, they would save much trouble."

In the late conflicts in the streets of Paris, it is calculated that not fewer than one hundred and fifty pharmacyuen painters were either killed or wounded.

A writer of the Boston Courier proposes that the city authorities purchase all the stock in trade of all the Grog Shops in the city, send it to one of the islands, and transport thither all the Drunkards of the city and let them have access to the rum free of cost. He thinks this would be the most effectual means of preventing the introduction of the cholera into the city which could be devised.

The Rev. Michael Hurley, D. D. pastor of St. Augustine's (R. C.) church, has given up his own private dwelling for the use of the contagious sick. The Sisters of Charity have also generously tendered their services to the sick. There is a good man and a christian in the act of administering to the sick, or of others, by a sacrifice of personal convenience.

A decent looking woman was taken, on Saturday, to a shedder hospital in one of the Southern sections of the city and, soon after having been deposited in bed, gave birth to a boy. Both mother and son were thriving in the evening. The accommodations, at the hospitals, are generally so excellent, that the mother and her infant are probably much better off than they would have been at home.

On Monday morning, a colored man was knocked down or fell down, under a cart, at the corner of Third and Walnut streets. The wheel passed over him and caused considerable injury. He was taken into the apothecaries shop of Messrs. Isaacs & Co. when it was found that one of his ears was torn nearly off. Dr. Isaacs made the usual attachments with needle and thread, and dressed the wounds. The man was then taken home.

Doctor John Y. Clark, who resides at the south-east corner of Twelfth and Market streets, has issued a card, stating that should the cholera prevail among us, the poor within the circuit of eight squares from his residence will be attended by him gratis.

Roberts Vaux, Esq. has resigned his appointment by the President as a commissioner to locate the Indian nations.

The panic arising from the existence of Cholera at Detroit was so great in the vicinity, that all communication was suspended by force. Bridges were pulled down, fences constructed across the roads, and guards stationed, to keep out the Cholera!

In the village of Glasco, near Poughkeepsie, N. Y., 18 cases of Cholera have occurred within the last five days, seven of which terminated fatally.

James Rue, from Philadelphia, died of Cholera on board of the steam-boat Chelsea, on her passage from New York to Boston.

Mr. Harwood, merchant of New York, died at North Brookfield, Mass., on Friday last, with all the symptoms of the Spasmodic Cholera.

The Mendville Courier says—Four children of a respectable citizen of this borough were on Monday last taken violently sick from drinking buttermilk which had been standing in a glazed crock. Their lives were despaired of, but are now considered out of danger.

Boston, July 26.—Yesterday afternoon, as a party were ascending the Quincy Rail-Road in one of the returning cars, the chain gave way, and they were precipitated over the precipice a distance of twenty or thirty feet. Mr Thomas Bulfinn, of Cuba, was killed, Mr. J. G. Gibson, of Boston, had both legs broken, Mr. W. G. Bond of Baltimore, was severely, and Mr. Andrew Belknap, of Boston, slightly injured.

The Schooner Oscar arrived at New Orleans from Vera Cruz, brings intelligence that Santa Anna was at Vera Cruz, and that negotiations were going on between him and the government, which were likely to end the war, and terminate the Texan affair amicably.

The stamp of the Lancaster Journal took from his garden on Thursday week, some apricots; four of them weighed a pound. The largest weighed more than a quarter of a pound, and measured seven inches and nine tenths in circumference.

The number of emigrants arrived at Quebec this season up to the 21st inst. is 40,470.

The Boston Gazette of Saturday says:—"At a meeting of the Common Council last evening, an order was passed that all peas, beans, onions, beets, carrots, parsnips, turnips, potatoes and corn, shall be divested of their pods, tops, husks, and useless parts, before being brought to market, under a penalty of not less than five nor more than twenty dollars for each and every offence."

The New York National Republican State Convention, which assembled at Utica last week, unanimously nominated the entire anti-masonic electoral and gubernational tickets.

The principal members of the Italian troupe, composing the Italian Opera, have arrived at New York.

The Wilmington Intelligencer, of the 4th ult. says:—"An attempt was made on Sunday night last, to stop the mail stage between this place and Charleston, three miles south of Santee Ferry. The persons were armed with clubs, and are supposed to be runaway negroes.—It was owing to the fleetness of the mail horses and the fleetness of the lead horses, that a robbery was avoided.

During the heavy hail storm, accompanied by thunder and lightning, which passed over at New York on Monday afternoon, the mastes of the schooner Caroline of Bordentown, lying at the foot of Fulton street, and the house of Clarence Lawrence, living at the foot of Oliver street, were both struck by the lightning. A quantity of iron lay on the pier near the vessels. The injury was very slight.

All the New York theatres are closed. The Bowery closed on the breaking out of the Cholera—the Richmond Hill a fortnight after—and the Park on Monday night last. Castle Garden continues open and is lighted up every possession. A display of fireworks takes place at the garden every night at nine o'clock.

At Potter's Field, New York, on Thursday last, a man dog a grave in which he was himself buried on Friday.

A Society is proposed in Boston, for the gratuitous nursing of the sick, in case of need. The plan is highly honorable to the benevolent. From 6 to 10 in the evening there is no danger in nursing persons sick of the Cholera, with proper care.—Much attention and labour are however necessary.

SORE SORE.—At Charlotte, North Carolina, the 4th of July was duly celebrated. Among the various toasts which added to the joy and festivities of the day, was this uncommonly new one. A suged pole was erected, and valuable articles of clothing placed on the top, the prize of him who should succeed in climbing to the top. After various trials and struggles, a lad succeeded in reaching the top and carrying off the spoils, amid the laugh and jests of the assembled crowd.

Williams Roby, who was indicted in June, 1830, for an assault with an intent to kill one Maria Leonard, and who was tried in March last, but the case continued from disagreement of the Jury, was on Friday last convicted at Boston, and found guilty of murder.

Because the Duke of Mecklenburg Schwerin has married the daughter of a baker, the London wits assert that he exceeded a wife very much.

A Canada paper, the Montreal Courant, when speaking of the Bank bill, and the veto upon the Bank Bill, says:—"The records of modern English legislation do not exhibit such frequent sees of arbitrary proceedings by a monarch, as have characterized the administration of Gen. Jackson."

The New York Board of Health, agreeably to the recommendation of the Special Medical Council, have resolved to prohibit the "introduction into the markets, and so far as possible the sale in any part of the city, of green and unripe fruits of every kind, and more especially of cucumbers, apples, pears and also of cucumbers and green corn."

Public Sale.

AGREEABLE to promise, Alex. Parker contemplates selling at Public Sale, on Monday, September 17th, at 10 o'clock, A. M. at his Garden, Fairmount, Range of the upper Penna street, without reserve, several hundred choice, and fine beautiful Dahlias, which he has been in great variation, such as Oranges, Lemon, Spadduck, Citron, &c. &c. awarded at 50 varieties of Monthly Roses, the same number of Geraniums, with a great variety of other choice plants. &c.—Catalogues ready by the day of sale.

A Parker, thankful for past favors, informs his friends and the public generally, that he has greatly increased his collection and has, as usual, for sale, plants of all sizes, which he will sell cheap, consisting of Trees, Shrubs, &c. &c. for sale several thousand roots, comprising upwards of 200 varieties of choice Tulips, some 100 varieties of Hyacinths, and a great variety of other Bulbous roots.

Orders promptly attended to, and plants packed to carry to any distance.

Amongst many curiosities not to be seen in any other place, the public are invited to see the Pasadena Cactus, a plant covering a space of full 60 feet, and showing as beautiful flowers from April till the plant is cut off in the fall.

☞ Year after year the customers continued to keep on the main walks, and not to handle the plants. aug 4—3t

H. V. KAMPEN,

DENTIST,

No. 8 South Eighth Street, Philadelphia.

Office Hours, from 9 till 1 o'clock. aug 4—1r

The Indian Dye,

Or Vegetable Extract for Coloring the Hair.

THIS preparation differs entirely from all other preparations used for the same purpose, inasmuch as it preserves the hair and skin from soiling, and gives a beautiful gloss at the same time affecting the desired purpose of changing its color, while many of the articles used for the same purpose, destroy the texture of the hair, making it dry and brittle, and the operation must be repeated to the use of the Indian Dye, as it does not even stain the skin. The hair, grey or white, hair can be colored in eight hours a beautiful and permanent brown or black, or if applied on going to bed at night, the change will be effected by morning. Whiskers and mustaches may be colored with the same facility. Price 1 dollar per bottle.

Parsital Hair's Oil—for the promotion of the growth and for the preservation of the human hair, no article is superior. It softens the hair, making the most stubborn locks soft and glossy, giving them a beautiful curl; removes the dandruff which impedes the growth of the hair, and frequently occasions baldness; and prevents the hair from falling out and turning grey. Price 25 cents per vial.

The above elegant articles are for sale by I. W. Glenn, at the Perfumery and Fancy Soap Manufactory, No. 64 South Third street, opposite the New Exchange; where may always be found an assortment of articles in the line, and up in the neatest style, and of prices which cannot fail to please. Orders from the country will meet with prompt attention.

aug 4—3

Ribbon and Fancy Store.

A GOOD assortment of Fancy and Plain Ribbons, with a variety of fancy articles, constantly on hand, wholesale and retail, at C. M'Karaher's Ribbon, Silk and Fancy Store, No. 37 North Second Street, opposite Christ Church. A variety of Fans, Traveling Baskets, Window Blinds, &c. June 28.

Brandywine Chalybeate Springs.

The Steam Boat Washington, Capt. H. READ, leaves Arch street wharf every day at 2 o'clock, P. M. for Wilmington.—Carriages will be provided at Wilmington to convey passengers to this justly celebrated watering place.

Fare through to the Springs, $1.25. June 16—tf

CHOLERA MEDICINES.

SMALL boxes, containing the medicines recommended by the Physicians of this city, to be kept in families to provide for a sudden attack of Spasmodic Cholera, with printed directions and a list of the prices of the articles, with a description of the symptoms of this terrible disease, with the mode of treatment during the disorder or before the arrival of the physician. For sale by the subscriber, at his drug and chemical store, No. 5, Minor, and also at No. 312 Market street.

aug 1 CHAS. MARSHALL

ALMANAC.

1832 AUGUST.	SUN RISES.	SUN SETS.	MOON RISES.	MOON'S PHASES.
4 SATURDAY,	5 0	7

THE OLIO.

Whatever mortals could inquire for,
For every why he had a wherefore.

Dr. Pangloss.

For the Saturday Evening Post.

Mr. Editor.—The following singular piece of poetry, I found some two or three weeks ago, as I was walking down Arch street very early in the morning, on my usual morning walk, and although I have intended, with your permission, to offer a copy of it to its author, through the medium of your paper, I have nevertheless neglected it, in consequence of a press of more important matters, until now. You will no doubt join me in sentiment, that it is altogether a very singular affair. I have not the pleasure of an acquaintance with the lady to whom it is addressed, but I should judge her inclination to matrimony to be excessively strong, if she would consent to it on such terms as are proposed in the article addressed to her by her "betrothed." The respect which every gentleman should entertain for the sex of which she is a member, will forbid my giving you her name; but either she or the author can have the original manuscript on application to you, or by informing you, by note, in what street, and at what number, they would have it left. I dare say the ladies will all be interested in some degree with the poetry, and perhaps some of them would like to try a hand on the same terms. Some of them, I am sure, would be disposed to investigate the condition of the hand before they accept the hand. I would respectfully propose to all who are not perfectly satisfied, to take the gentleman on trial for a few months, before the marriage certificate be signed.

Yours, most respectfully, C.

TO MISS ——

In Answer to the First Question Propounded to her Betrothed, after their Engagement to be Married.

You ask me how I'll treat you, when
United firm together
In Hymen's holy bands—and when
Each shall become the other?

Why, if, perchance, you'll always good,
And must me with a pretty smile,
I'll always be in peaceable mood,
And love and kiss you all the while.

Or if, mayhap, you dislike this,
I'll act as better fits the man;
And you shall deal out ev'ry kiss,
While I'll be happy—if I can.

But if you grow perverse and scold,
I think I'll try to aid you;
And if so bad you can't be sold,
Why then, I'll have to hug you!

APPLE BUTTER.

Air—"Rap's Wife."

'Twas Spring, and near the last of Lent,
When days were bright, and long, and sunny,
When heat began as if it meant
To rain apple-sauce and honey;
A certain thrifty dame,
Whose name it suits me not to utter,
Thought, by re-stewing, to reclaim
The favour of her Apple-Butter.

She told her husband he must buy
A crock, or jar, for the occasion;
Which he forgot.—The reason why,
Was owing to his meditation.
The little dame began to scold,
That is to say—to make a splutter,
And so her husband plainly told,
She meant to save her Apple-Butter.

Then to a neighbor's house she ran,
Though it is not quite free from sorrow;
She there dame Spud all her plan,
And mentioned what she wanted to borrow
Then some she bore a massive jar,
Which to a perspiration put her
Resolv'd was she that one should not
Her plan to save her Apple Butter.

The stove was heated nearly red,
When she had all the trappings ready,
She call'd her man, whose name was Ned
(Or, more familiarly, call'd Neddy,)
Within the stove he put the jar,
An oath it'll burst he swore did utter,
He hoped he had—which made him swear
And almost curse the Apple-Butter.

The jar was in—and there it staid,
For one it never could be taken:
Ned did his best, but was afraid,
Within the stove to risk his bacon.
The little dame was in the dumps,
And did most lamentably mutter
Her sad complaints—and stirred her stumps,
In hopes to save her Apple-Butter.

The lower border of her frock,
The dame pick'd up, to conceal the blunder,
And pull'd—and pull'd—at length the crock
Was absolutely pulled asunder!
And she was scalded on the shins!
Neal, Ned, " By gad that ends the spatter
And now I guess as how your sins,
Are better washed in Apple-Butter,

A VARMOUNTER.

Mew or Spaw.—A modern traveller in Italy relates the following whimsical account of a ruse de guerre, practised by a highway robber. My companions, in diligence were all on the qui vive, for the carriage had been stopped and robbed two evenings before by a single footman. This fellow had practised a most ingenious and during great speed to effect his purpose. He manufactured ten feet of straw, which, in the darkness of the night appeared with fosses and others, he drew up in the road in battle array, and having taken his post a little in advance of his corps, he cried the Diligence to stop. Most astonishing, if the least resistance was offered to call up his companions, and put all the passengers to death. In this manner he had the whole party under contribution, amongst whom were two Spanish merchants, with their servants, whose packs were heavily laden, and who were well armed.

An odd Flight.—A group of hay-makers in Selkirkshire, lately saw an eagle rising above the steep mountains that enclosed the narrow valley. The spectators were soon aware of something peculiar in the flight of the bird they were observing. He used his wings violently, and the strokes were often repeated as if he were unusually agitated; wheeling in circles constantly decreasing, whilst his ascent was proportionately rapid. He rose until he was nearly out of sight, when at length he appeared to descend, but with great rapidity, and in the manner of a shot bird. When he reached the ground a black tailed weasel came from the body, as the hay-makers came up, looked around, stood on its hind legs for a moment or two, and then ran into a bush. The eagle was dead, covered with his blood upon examination it appeared that the weasel had eaten into his throat and destroyed him.

A respectable clergyman in the neighborhood of Boston, being at the residence of one of his wealthy and hospitable parishioners, made some complaints of the pitiful sum allowed him for his labour, and concluded by wishing it could be mentioned, that he might be able comfortably to support and bring up an increasing family. A colored servant happening at the moment, and hearing something about salary, and family, thought the minister was complaining of the drought; so, out of his goodness of heart, running into the garden, he conveyed to the chaise of the minister a large quantity of celery, &c. After the worthy guest had gone, the negro came in, and with a countenance free from blandess, says, "Mossa, guess Mr. —— got salary enough now. I cram his big empty box full."—Boston Traveller.

Bobb Doddington was very lethargic. Falling asleep one day after dinner, with Sir Richard Temple and Lord Cobham, the general, the latter reproached Doddington with his drowsiness. Doddington, if need having been asleep, and to prove he had not, offered to repeat all Lord Cobham had been saying. Cobham challenged him to do so. Doddington repeated a story, and Lord Cobham owned he had been telling it. "Well," said Doddington, "and yet I did not hear a word of, but I went to sleep because I knew that about this time of day you would tell that story."

An Indian passing through the woods one day, stopped before a man who was chopping wood and surveyed him with great gravity. He remarked that every time the man brought his axe to the longest vent forth a sound somewhat like ugh, as if this was a part of the operation. "Why you speakum ugh when you bring your axe down?" said he. The man laughed, "O it makes me chop faster." Ah! does it? Why you no say ugh when you take him up—then you clap twice as fast?"—H. E. governant.

Valiant certificate of Character.—We were pestered by sellers of pins who pretended to have dug them out of the ruins of Kaunas, but which had probably manufactured them for the occasion. One old fellow, to induce me to purchase, showed me some certificates of character which he had obtained from English travellers, but which being written in English he could not read himself. Almost the first which he put into my hand ran thus—"The bearer is a d—d old rascal kick him out of camp."—Mundy's Pen and Pencil Sketches in India.

Pain of Jealousy.—The hero of the novel called Tristam Lite Myself, says—"I have often heard that, and that, and 'tother pain mentioned as the worst that mortals can endure—such as the tooth-ache, earache, head-ache, cramp, a bile, or a blister; now I protest, though I have tried all these, nothing seems to me at all to come up to a pretty sharp fit of jealousy."

A young man named Neck, has recently been married to Mr. Heels. They are now, therefore, literally tied neck and heels together.

A Perfect Lay.—"Ben," said a father, the other day, "I'm being sent—but, as sure as I can get time, I mean to give you a flogging." "Don't hurry yourself, pa," replied the patient lad, "I can wait."

A gentleman noticing an urchin devouring green apples, took occasion to caution him of the danger of subjecting himself to an attack of Cholera; the boy replied, "I ain't afraid of Cholera, I live in a Drug Store."

A woman case of Cholera.—Henry Ramsbottom, the other evening, told Fred. at Bellamy's, that a short time since, he met with a decided case of Cholera in a Windsor coach. "Why, I dont doubt it," said F. "if you saw him in the blue stage."

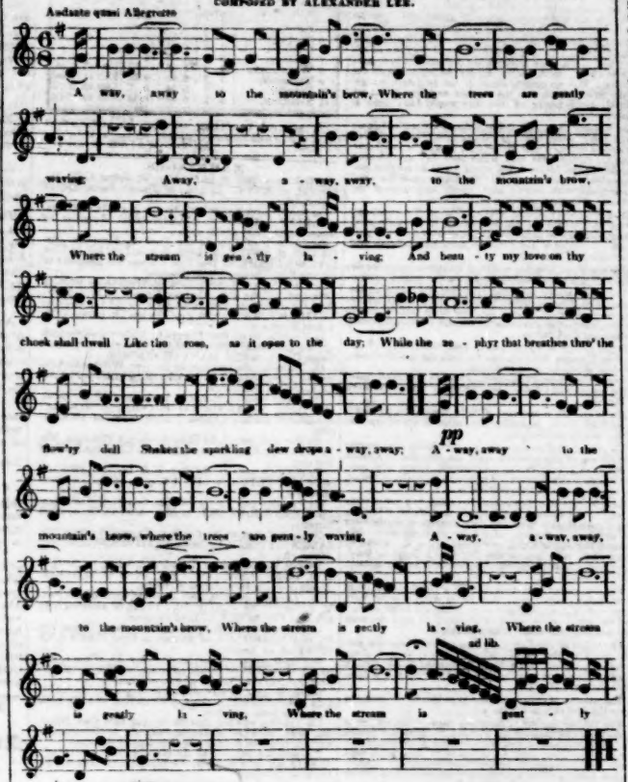
A newly married gentleman and lady, riding in a chaise, were unfortunately overturned. A person coming to their assistance, observed it was a very shocking sight. "Very shocking indeed," replied the gentleman, "to see a new married couple fall out so soon."

Why is a lady while playing on her piano, like a circle? Because she's a fingering ring (fingering)

Away, away to the Mountain's brow.

AS SUNG WITH UNBOUNDED APPLAUSE BY MISS HUGHES,

COMPOSED BY ALEXANDER LEE.



MOUSTACHES.

"His tawny beard was th' equal grace,
Both of his wisdom and his face."

Hudibras.

"What's them are things growing out of your upper lip, Mister?" asked a country Yankee of a coxcomb, whom he met the other day.

"Sar?" exclaimed the dandy, fiercely raising his rattan, and bristling up to the interrogator—"what business is that to you, sar?"

"Oh, no business of any consequence, to speak on," replied the Yankee—"I jest axed for information, not being much acquainted with them are things."

"Well, sar?" returned the gallant, angrily, "what if you aint acquainted with 'em? Must a fellow of your cloth have the impudence to question a gentleman of mine?"

"Is that really your cloth, Mister, or is it the tailor's?" asked the countryman.

"The tailor's!" exclaimed the coxcomb, fiercely—"what do you mean by that? Do you intend to insinuate that I—Sakeath! sar, I'll shot—"

"Well, I thought as much," returned the Yankee, carelessly sticking his hands into his breeches pocket, and standing stiff before the dandy—"I thought you never intended to pay for them."

"What is that to you whether I pay for them or not? Hav'nt I a right to manage as I please with my own tailor—to pay him or let it alone?"

"Why, Mister, that depends very much on what sort of a bargain you make. If your tailor agrees to let you cheat him, why, that's his look-out, not mine. But you hav'nt told me yet what you call them are things on your upper lip."

"Sar, you're an impertinent puppy, sar."

"So I heard you say. Now father, he's got a tarryer dog—but he don't tarry much, I can tell you—he'll kill three rats in two seconds—but, as I was saying, father, he's got a tarryer dog, that's darned rough and hairy about the mouth—Lord! he aint to mind a mouthful to you. He'd cling his tail between his legs if he was to see you, and cry Ti-i! ti-i! and run to the end of the world without ever stopping. My gracious! how like the divil you do look with them are things."

"Look! why, sar, they are all the go now.—There's no finished gentleman now but what wears moustaches."

"Mustychers, do you call 'em? Well, by hokey, they are nasty, and rusty too. They look very much like the latter end of our dog's tail, when he brushes it on the floor. Faugh! I would'nt touch 'em no more than—"

"Touch 'em sar, if you offer to put a finger on them, I'll cane you within an inch of your life—I will, sar."

"What, with that are switch, Mister? I should'nt mind it no more than I should an oat-straw."

"Well, sar, touch my moustaches, and see if you don't get it."

"Touch your mustychers! Why I'd as lieves touch two old chaws of tobacker that have just been spit out. Touch 'em indeed! Why, Mister, I would'nt touch 'em with the tongs.—I can't conceive, for my life, what should induce any human critter to wear sich darned nasty, looking things as them."

"Nasty looking! do you call 'em? Sar, you have no taste. Nasty looking, indeed! Why, sar, they are all the admiration of the ladies."

"Ladies! ha, ha, ha! Ladies! They must have a queer notion any how. But there are some women who are onaccountable fond of puppies and sitch like animals; and I've seen 'em fondle and kiss 'em, as if they were human critters. But, Lord! I don't see how any woman could ever let her lips come within gun-shot of yourn. Admiration of the ladies!"

"Do you question what I say, sar?"

"Why, Mister, I don't know what kind of ladies you have in the city here. But one thing, I can tell you—our country gals would'nt no more let you touch 'em than they would a toad—they're very particular what comes in contact with their lips. But, Mister, how in the name of hair and bristles do you eat? How do you go to work to get the vittels into your mouth, with them are things hanging over it, like a hedge-fence over the side of a ditch? Do you eat meat and sich like? or do you live upon spoon-vittels."

"It's none of your business, sar, what I live on. I board at seven dollars a week; and I eat what I please, sar, and drink what I please."

"Seven dollars a week! my gracious! we git board and washing, and all, in the country, for a dollar and a half, but I 'spose they charge you five dollars and a half extra for them are mustyches. Faugh! I wouldn't have 'em at the table for ten dollars."

"D—n it! what a fool I am to stand here talking with a fellow of your cloth." Thus saying, the man with the moustaches flourished his dandy switch, wheeled about, and walked on. He had gone but a few steps, when the Yankee bawled after him—

"Hullos! Mister—Don't you want a curry-comb? I've got some real fine ones, with teeth on both sides. They're bang-up. I can tell you."

"Curse on your curry-combs and you too."

"Don't swear, Mister—nor go off in passion. I meant no offence in what I've said.—But I must declare you're the darn'dest ugly looking man in the face, I ever see in all my life."

Cheap Pitcher.—An apothecary called into a crockery store, to tell the vender of the brittle ware how cheap he had bought a pitcher at another store. "I gave," said he, "but thirty-eight cents for it."—The trader showed him one of the same size and pattern, for which he only asked thirty cents, being eight cents cheaper than the boasting seller of nostrums gave for his. "But, said the apothecary, "I paid for it in medicines." "That alters the case very materially," said the man of crockery, "for now the pitcher will stand you in only eight cents."

FOOTMARKS.

Voltaire, in Zadig, has attributed to his hero a sagacity in tracing footsteps, which, no doubt, has often been considered an idle invention. Such a power, however, appears to be possessed by the Arabs to a degree which deprives even Zadig of the marvellous. "The Arab," says Burckhardt, "Who has applied himself diligently to the study of footsteps, can generally ascertain, from inspecting the impression, to what individual of his own, or of some neighboring tribe, the footstep belongs, and therefore is able to judge whether it was a stranger who passed or a friend. He likewise knows, from the slightness or depth of the impression, whether the man who made it carried a load or not. From a certain regularity of intervals between the steps, a Bedouin can judge whether that man, whose feet left the impression was fatigued or not, as the pace becomes more irregular and the intervals unequal; hence he can calculate the chances of overtaking the man. Besides all this, every Arab knows the printed footsteps of his own camels, and of those belonging to his immediate neighbors. He knows by the depth or slightness of the impression whether a camel was pasturing, and therefore not carrying any load, or mounted by one person only, or heavily loaded. If the marks of the two fore feet appear to be deeper in the sand, he concludes that the camel had a weak breast, and this serves him as a clue to ascertain the owner. In fact, a Bedouin, from the impression of a camel's or of his driver's footsteps, draws so many conclusions, that he always learns something concerning the beast or its owner; and in some cases this mode of acquiring knowledge appears almost supernatural. The Bedouin sagacity in this respect is wonderful, and becomes particularly useful in the pursuit of fugitives, or in searching after cattle. I have seen a man discover and trace the footsteps of his camel in a manadah where upwards of a thousand of other footsteps crossed the road in every direction; and this person could tell the name of every one who had passed there in the course of that morning. I myself found it often useful to know the impressions made by the feet of my own companions and camels; as from circumstances which inevitably occur in the desert, travellers sometimes are separated from their friends. In passing through dangerous districts, the Bedouin guides will pass close by a townsman or stranger to walk by the side of his camel. If he wears shoes, every Bedouin who passes will know by the impression that some townsman has travelled that way; and, if he walk barefooted, the mark of his step, less full than that of a Bedouin, immediately betrays the foot of a townsman, little accustomed to walk. It is therefore to be apprehended that the Bedouins, who regard every townsman as a rich man, might suppose him loaded with valuable property, and consequently set out in pursuit of him. A keen Bedouin guide is constantly and exclusively occupied during his march in examining footsteps, and frequently alights from his camel to acquire certainty respecting their nature. I have known instances of camels being traced by their masters during a distance of six day's journey, to the dwelling of the man who had stolen them. Many secret transactions are brought to light by this knowledge of the earth, or footsteps; and a Bedouin can scarcely hope to escape detection in any clandestine proceeding, as his passages in the sand are known to the inhabitants of every tribe. It is certain that every one of his Arabian neighbors can read."—Notes on the Bedouins and Wahabys, by Burckhardt.

To have attempted much is always laudable, even when the enterprise is above the strength that undertakes it, to rest below his own aim is incident to every one whose fancy is active and whose views are comprehensive; nor is any man satisfied with himself because he has done much, but because he can conceive little.

THE CHOLERA.—In the present state of public feeling upon this subject, the statistical details which have been given of its progress and effects in other countries, are interesting and important. The registry made by the Berlin Police, throws considerable light upon the extent of its ravages in a crowded population, and may be useful in estimating the extent of the comparative danger to each individual, where cholera has appeared.

During the month of September last, according to that registry, the number of persons attacked by the disease, was 893. Of these 125 were attended in hospitals, and the others, 768 in number, were attended in private houses. On careful inquiry, it is found that the number of houses in which persons were seized, was 409, in 273 of which one individual only was attacked. It follows that in the remaining 136 houses, there were 620 cases of cholera, or between 4 and 5 in each house.

In these 409 houses it was further ascertained accurately, that there were 4200 families, a density of population unparalleled in any part of America. Estimating each family at four persons it thus appears that 16,800 persons were exposed to contact with the disease, of whom 768 were attacked, or about one in eighteen. The rate of mortality was about 631 out of every thousand attacked. The number of attacked, was about 1 in 108, and the deaths about 1 in 164 of the entire population of the city.

Similar calculations have also been made with regard to several other places, shewing the number of inhabitants, the number of cases, the number of deaths, the proportion of deaths to the sick, of the sick to the well, and the deaths to the entire population. We subjoin a few of them.

In Moscow, the number of inhabitants was 350,000—of cases 8576, and of deaths 4690. The deaths were therefore 546 out of every thousand attached, and the cases about one in forty of the whole population. The mortality was to the entire population in about the proportion of 1 to 76.

In St. Petersburg, the number of inhabitants is set down at 300,000, the number of cases at 9947, and the deaths at 4757. The deaths were therefore about 514 out of every thousand attacked; and the cases one in thirty-seven of the whole population. The mortality was to the entire population, in the proportion of 1 to 76 nearly.

In Vienna, with a population of 300,000, the cases were 3960, and the deaths 1899. The deaths were 477 in every thousand cases, and the number attached one in seventy-five of the whole population. The mortality was therefore to the population in the proportion of one to one hundred and fifty-eight.

In Hamberg, the number of inhabitants is about 100,000. Of these 874 were attacked, and 455 died—or in a proportion of about 50 in 100.—The cases were about one in every 114 of the population, and the deaths about one in two hundred and twenty.

In Prague, the number of cases was proportionally much larger. Out of a population of 96,000, 3234 were seized with the cholera, of whom 1333, (or 41 in 100) died. This gives the proportion of those attacked to be 1 in 29 of the aggregate population, and that of deaths at about 1 in 69.

In Hungary, the population is reckoned at 8,750,000. The number of cases of cholera was 435,330, and of deaths 188,000—or a proportion of the sick to the whole population of 1 in 20, and of deaths about 43 in 100 sick. The whole mortality was to the number of inhabitants as 1 to about 47.

We quote the following paragraphs from Dr. Bronson's fourth letter to the Albany Board of Health. They utter a loud and solemn warning to the intemperate and the uncleanly.

Intemperance of any species, but particularly intemperance in the use of distilled liquors, has been a more productive cause of increased susceptibility to Cholera than any other cause, indeed, all others. Drunkards and tipplers have been searched out and transfixed with such unerring certainty, as to show that the arrows of death have not been dealt out with indiscriminate aim. An indescribable terror has been spread through the ranks of this unfortunate class of beings. They see the bolts of destruction aimed at their heads and every one counts himself a victim. There seems to be a natural affinity between cholera and ardent spirits. Squalidness and filth, low and unventilated habitations, and meagre and unwholesome diet have also had a powerful effect in preparing the system for the reception of the epidemic. The hovels of the poor and the wretched have been entered by the insatiate monster, and nearly depopulated.—Three or four, or more, have often died in a single hut. Two are dead and another dying frequently at the same time. In this state, it is not unusual for every surviving member of the family to desert their habitation, leaving their friends or their relations, their parents or their children, to expire in solitude. The bonds of parental, fraternal or conjugal relations, are feeble under these circumstances; they drop, and are consumed like flax in the fire.

Though many valuable lives were lost in Montreal in the decline of the disease, whose circumstances were good and whose habits were for the most part regular and temperate, yet in many of these cases, the mind had been for a long time in a state of extreme agitation, or medicine had been injudiciously used. After nights of sleeplessness and days of anxiety, the body had become worn out under the accumulated sources of trouble and exhaustion; or the system had been unhinged and the digestive powers debilitated tampering with prophylactics. I think I may say with perfect truth, that the number of those who have been attacked with cholera, who were sober, temperate, regular, cleanly, well-fed and well-clothed, calm and fearless of death, and who used no medicine, have not been in the proportion of one in fifteen of the whole number of the sick. The death rate compared with the total amount of mortality have been in a still less proportion, probably not one in thirty or forty. I think I don't exaggerate. Cholera, considered in this point of view, is a less formidable complaint than is generally thought; or rather, it is more within human control than almost any great epidemic which has ever visited our world. I have hitherto touched on the mode of prevention and shall not return to it here.

Remedy for Vomiting.—Common Coffee—prepare it in the following manner:—Roast half a pint of Indian Corn in an iron pan or kettle, free from any grease,—stir it steadily until it is so brown as to be nearly black—grind or pound it. To one tea-cup of the corn powder, pour a pint of boiling water—let it boil five minutes in a close vessel, then strain it, and give half a tea-cup full without milk, if it is vomited once give the other half cup, which is usually sufficient.

This receipt cures nine times out of ten, and is valuable as it enables the stomach to retain medicine.

JOB AND ORNAMENTAL PRINTING, OF EVERY DESCRIPTION, AT THE OFFICE OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, No. 14 Hedge Alley, Philadelphia.

Farm for Sale.

A Valuable Grazing Farm, on Tinicum Island, 9 miles from the Centre Bridge, Philadelphia, on a direct line.

Containing 146 acres 139 perches, of which 165 acres 65 perches are Upland, and 20 acres 74 perches Meadow, the balance there are about 30 acres of thriving wood, upwards of 500 apple trees of the choicest grafted fruit, besides peach, and other fruit trees, the crops of the farm are now in good order, there are on the premises a stone dwelling house, 40 feet square, built of the best materials, an artificial rock basin, supplied with fine cold water from a pump sufficient for a dairy of 30 cows, there are also an ice house, 12 large pasturing barns, a wagon house, sheds, corn crib, and a pump of good water in the barn yard, there is also a cistern's house, and pump to it a spring house.

Possession may be had, Ninth day of March next, in the meantime the premises may be viewed by calling on the subscriber on the premises.

It is presumed that any person desirous of purchasing such an estate will view the premises. If not sold before the first day of September, it will be rented on a lease for five years.

For terms, apply to RICHARD WILLING.

Philadelphia, July 23, 1832. 105 South Third street.

July 28—3t

New Invention.

THE subscriber has invented and obtained a patent for a machine to break and prepare fibers for spinning, called the

FILLER-BREAKER,

by which at least one third of the fibrous, cellulosic material can be saved, and the engine force of the machine be reduced one third, the work much more neat, and be in now prepared to sell machines, or county and state rights to make, vend or use them. Persons disposed to view the machine, may call on the subscriber, and can see the machine in operation and obtain all desirable information concerning it, by applying to

JOSEPH MAFFIT, Lancaster, Pa.

☞ Sugar makers are cautioned against purchasing this machine from persons not legally authorized to sell them, as the patentee will hold them responsible for damages, who use them without proper authority.

 Publishers of newspapers will probably benefit the public by noticing the invention. may 26—3m

Stray Mare and Bull.

CAME to the farm of the subscriber, living in Blockley township, Philadelphia county, about half a mile from the Falls Bridge, called Woodside Farm, a sorrel mare, about the 20th inst. She is about nine years old, and between and a half hands high; she has a streak of white down her face, and two white hind feet; she had a stallion halter on, and is gaed order.

The Bull came about the 15th of the 5th month last; he is brown, about four years old. The owners are requested to prove property, pay the charges and take them away.

ROBERT PARTE.

July 28—3t

BRITISH COLLEGE OF HEALTH

MORISON'S UNIVERSAL VEGETABLE MEDICINES, imported from the above COLLEGE in LONDON, most only to be known and relief to be appreciated.—Facts are plain things, and although these medicines have been scarcely heard of in this city, their value has been well attested in almost every State in the Union, and the demand hitherto has been so great that the agent at New York has not been able to procure them in time to supply the demand. They recommend only any real disease to which man is liable, as, The impurity of the Blood, connected with the disordered state of the digestive organs, from whence arises every disease, of whatever form or name. Or to use the axiom of the late celebrated, though eccentric genius, Mr. Abernethy, "there is but one ailing for many sorts." Patients who are in the liberal use of these medicines, need not fear the approach of the expected Cholera, or any other virulent disease, as in several instances they have effected the perfect cure of persons thus attacked, which may be seen in the practical works of the inventors of the Hygeian system, which can, with the medicines be had of the agents only, in packets of pills, at $1, 2 and 3 each packet, and the dispensing powders at 37½ cents each box, likewise, MORISONIANA, or Family Adviser of the British College of Health, price $2 50. Practical Proofs, 37½ cents each.

F. BRINDLEY.

No. 192 South Third Street, near Lombard.

J. STRENGE,

56 North Eighth street, near Arch, Agents at Philadelphia.

CAUTION.—The public are particularly cautioned against a spurious medicine, purporting to be MORISON'S PILLS, vended by persons in this city, as none are genuine but those sold by the agents as above stated. july 28—3t

John C. Rang,

AT No. 131 S. John Street, 7 doors above Noble, Lock and Gun Smith and Machine Maker, Wrought and Brass Founders, from the smallest to the large work by steam. Turning, planer grooves and turning lathes, screws at the smallest notice and superior to any heretofore offered to the public, made on the most reasonable terms and warranted. june 16—3m

A Cure for Piles! Chemical Pile Ointment.

HEMORRHOIDS or PILES are so common with all classes of people, and so troublesome and difficult to cure in many instances, that any thing interesting to the invalid, in relation to their cure, is sought for with avidity. The "Chemical Pile Ointment," by experience and observation of some of our most intelligent physicians and patients, who have made use of it, is decidedly superior to any other, by any preparation now in use. Its soothing and curative effects are peculiar, and by this process, and attention to the general directions, a cure is speedily effected. It is put up in Porcelain Pots, accompanied with pathologic and practical information and directions for its use.

It gives universal satisfaction, and from one infant pots will last a cure, under almost any circumstances. It is a beautiful article, and honestly entitled to the attention of invalids.

For sale by I. THOMPSON, N. W. corner of Second and Market streets, and J. F. Heinitsh, Lancaster Pa. june 16—3m

Drugs, Chemicals, Dye-Stuffs, Oils, Paints, Glass, &c. &c.

THE subscribers have recently opened a wholesale and retail store, at No. 79 corner of Second and Market streets, between Market and Chesnut, Philadelphia, where a general assortment of the articles in their line will be constantly kept on hand. They have also made arrangements for collecting, and procuring, in neat packages, medicinal and culinary herbs, both native and exotic, which they intend disposing of upon reasonable terms. HARLAN & SIDDALL.

N. B. Persons well acquainted with, and disposed to collect herbs, may make advantageous engagements for the ensuing season, by early application. april 7—6mo

Marshall's Concentrated

Compound Syrup of Sarsaparilla, for the Cure of Obstinate Eruptions of the Skin, Pimples or pustules on the face, Blotches arise from an impure habit of body, Scaly Eruptions, Pains in the Bones, Tetter, Scrofula or King's Evil, White Swellings.

And all diseases arising from an impure state of the blood, produced either by a long residence in a hot and unhealthy climate, or the injudicious use of mercury, &c.

This very convenient and active Syrup is now with confidence offered to the medical profession and the public, as possessing, in an concentrated form, all the active properties of the Sarsaparilla in its most concentrated form.

Wholesale and retail only, at CHARLES MARSHALL'S Wholesale Drug and Chemical Store, No. 4 Minor street, between 5th and 6th, north side. Also at his wholesale and retail store, No. 312 Market street, Philadelphia. june 9—tf

Ore's Patent Boots and Shoes.

THE subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public, that he has secured letters patent for the improved method of making shoes without seams and boots in one piece, and consequently can offer orders from those who may favor him with their custom. He warrants them to be more durable, set neater and easier, than the ordinary kind; having no occasion to break or give pain, and has every reason to believe from experience, that this invention prevents the leather from breaking. Those in the trade will find it profitable and advantageous in purchasing a right.

Orders from the country will receive immediate attention, either for patent rights or boots and shoes.

Rights for individuals $20, in cash or merchandise.

All communications must be post paid, and every letter with money enclosed will be duly attended to.

Patents right conveyed to any part of the United States, accompanied with certificates, patterns and instructions.

☞ A LADY and a GOOD CRIMPER, Wanted.

June 23—1y No. 60 South Eighth st. Philada.

Wood Turning.

JOHN FULTON, No. 3 Back Alley, south side of the Penn'a. Railroad Bank, and back of the Merchants' Coffee House, respectfully informs Cabinet Makers, Turners, and the public generally, that having erected a Steam Engine for Turning, he is enabled to execute the largest orders in his way at the shortest notice, and on much lower terms than any other person, and warrants the most perfect satisfaction. Constantly on hand a general assortment of Bed Posts. apr 21—1y

Patent Fly Net

FOR CARRIAGE, GIG OR SADDLE HORSES.

THE subscriber having obtained Letters Patent, granted by the Department of the United States, for the sole manufacture and vending of the above useful article, begs leave to inform the public, that he has them ready for sale, at his Coach Lace, Fringe and Military Store in this city.

The above improved Patent Fly Net is manufactured of various colors, to suit any carriage, and is a very ornamental article, and which for beauty, durability and convenience, exceeds any thing of the kind heretofore offered to the public.—

HENRY KORN

No. 22 North Third street.

N. B. All persons are hereby cautioned against infringing on the above patent right. may 19—3m.

REMOVAL.

THE subscriber begs leave to inform her friends and the public, that she has removed her DYING AND SCOURING establishment from south Third, to 30 Lombard street, 7th door below Third, south side, where she solicits a continuance of their patronage. ANN FLAHERTY.

Dyeing and Scouring in all its branches executed in the best manner and at the shortest notice. july 21—3t

Improved Mills

For Grinding Grain, Plaster, Paints, Dye Stuffs, &c.

R. & W. G. JOHNSTON, of Philadelphia, having obtained Letters Patent for an improvement in the construction of mills, for grinding wheat, rye and other grains, for flour and feed, and for grinding plaster, paints, dye stuffs, &c. which may be advantageously worked by horse, steam, or other power, respectfully invite the attention of the public.

Mills constructed agreeably to this improvement, do not require one half the power to drive them, and will do more than one half of the quantity of work, when compared with other mills of the same size, of the large stones. The decided advantages arising from the practicability of driving them by light streams of water, where before it was the greatest difficulty to make mills do the work, and of working them at seasons of the year when it is not practicable, from an insufficient supply of water to run the large stones, strongly recommend them to general use.

One of the mills is now in operation at the corner of George and Sixth streets, between Market and Chestnut, and Wood and Sixth and Seventh streets, Philadelphia, where all persons feeling an interest in important improvements are invited to call.

Letters on the subject, addressed as above, will meet prompt attention. july 14—tf

West Chester Boarding School for Girls.

IS located in the borough of West Chester, Chester county, Pennsylvania, 26 miles west of Philadelphia.

An considerable additions have been made to the buildings of this institution, during the last year, a larger number of pupils can now be accommodated.

The situation is delightful and remarkably healthy, commanding an extensive prospect of a fertile and well cultivated country. In Philadelphia reference may be made to James Morris, Esq. Pres. of the Bank of Penna. Mr. Anthony Belmar, Jun. Esq. PHILIP PRICE & Co.

July 14—6m

To Southern and Western Merchants,

DEALERS IN CLOTHING.

JAMES WILLIAMS, Jr. No. 192 Market Street, (up stairs,) Having commenced the Tailoring business, is now prepared to receive the orders of merchants.

All orders executed at the shortest notice, and on the most reasonable terms.

By long experience and personal attention to business, he feels confident of a share of patronage, who may favor him with their commands.

Merchants, wishing to purchase ready made clothes, may have them made up to a superior manner, and at reduced prices.

☞ On hand, a sample of broadcloth coats, from 10 to 15 dollars. july 14—tf

Table Rule and Art of Cutting Garments.

THE ART OF CUTTING GARMENTS.—After years of assiduous application, the subscriber has systematized and patented this great calculation, and offers it to the public, confident that in a few days, any one attentive to the rule will execute the most scientific. This system being adapted to the measure of the human form, by which the pupil may execute his work without fear of attention or mistake.

N. B. CIRCULAR CLOAKS.—The rule for cutting these garments, is now added to the system, together with the saving of cloth, must be considered worthy of attention.

J. WILLIAMS Jr

Teacher of Cutting, No. 192 Vine street, between Fifth and Sixth streets. july 14—1y

CHOLERA!!!

A CERTAIN preventive will be found in Dr. JAYNE'S CARMINATIVE BALSAM, as success is unrivalled by any other medicine in the different diseases of the stomach and bowels, as Cholera Morbus, Cramp Choler, Diarrhea, or looseness, Dysentery, &c. &c. It is gratefully adopted by the delicate, as the better it produces enables us its reputation as a first rate farmer. The fences, banks and ditches are in good order, there are on the premises a stone dwelling house, 40 feet square, built of the best materials, an artificial rock basin, supplied with fine cold water from a pump sufficient for a dairy of 30 cows, there are also an ice house, 12 large pasturing barns, a wagon house, sheds, corn crib, and a pump of good water in the barn yard, there is also a cistern's house, and pump to it a spring house.

Possession may be had, Ninth day of March next, in the meantime the premises may be viewed by calling on the subscriber on the premises.

It is presumed that any person desirous of purchasing such an estate will view the premises. If not sold before the first day of September, it will be rented on a lease for five years.

For terms, apply to RICHARD WILLING.

Philadelphia, July 23, 1832. 105 South Third street.

July 28—3t

New Invention.

THE subscriber has invented and obtained a patent for a machine to break and prepare fibers for spinning, called the

FILLER-BREAKER,

by which at least one third of the fibrous, cellulosic material can be saved, and the engine force of the machine be reduced one third, the work much more neat, and be in now prepared to sell machines, or county and state rights to make, vend or use them. Persons disposed to view the machine, may call on the subscriber, and can see the machine in operation and obtain all desirable information concerning it, by applying to

JOSEPH MAFFIT, Lancaster, Pa.

☞ Sugar makers are cautioned against purchasing this machine from persons not legally authorized to sell them, as the patentee will hold them responsible for damages, who use them without proper authority.

 Publishers of newspapers will probably benefit the public by noticing the invention. may 26—3m

Stray Mare and Bull.

CAME to the farm of the subscriber, living in Blockley township, Philadelphia county, about half a mile from the Falls Bridge, called Woodside Farm, a sorrel mare, about the 20th inst. She is about nine years old, and between and a half hands high; she has a streak of white down her face, and two white hind feet; she had a stallion halter on, and is gaed order.

The Bull came about the 15th of the 5th month last; he is brown, about four years old. The owners are requested to prove property, pay the charges and take them away.

ROBERT PARTE.

July 28—3t

BRITISH COLLEGE OF HEALTH

MORISON'S UNIVERSAL VEGETABLE MEDICINES, imported from the above COLLEGE in LONDON, most only to be known and relief to be appreciated.—Facts are plain things, and although these medicines have been scarcely heard of in this city, their value has been well attested in almost every State in the Union, and the demand hitherto has been so great that the agent at New York has not been able to procure them in time to supply the demand. They recommend only any real disease to which man is liable, as, The impurity of the Blood, connected with the disordered state of the digestive organs, from whence arises every disease, of whatever form or name. Or to use the axiom of the late celebrated, though eccentric genius, Mr. Abernethy, "there is but one ailing for many sorts." Patients who are in the liberal use of these medicines, need not fear the approach of the expected Cholera, or any other virulent disease, as in several instances they have effected the perfect cure of persons thus attacked, which may be seen in the practical works of the inventors of the Hygeian system, which can, with the medicines be had of the agents only, in packets of pills, at $1, 2 and 3 each packet, and the dispensing powders at 37½ cents each box, likewise, MORISONIANA, or Family Adviser of the British College of Health, price $2 50. Practical Proofs, 37½ cents each.

F. BRINDLEY.

No. 192 South Third Street, near Lombard.

J. STRENGE,

56 North Eighth street, near Arch, Agents at Philadelphia.

CAUTION.—The public are particularly cautioned against a spurious medicine, purporting to be MORISON'S PILLS, vended by persons in this city, as none are genuine but those sold by the agents as above stated. july 28—3t

Yellow Springs, Chester County.

THE public are respectfully informed, that a superior lot of post coaches will leave E. Evans's White Swan Hotel, No. 106 Race, and Thomas Taylor's Farmer's Inn, No. 216 Market street, daily, Sundays excepted, at 6 o'clock, A. M. and arrive at Mrs. Hickman's Yellow Springs in time to dine. Returning, will leave the Springs, daily, (Sundays excepted) at 10 o'clock, A. M. and arrive in Philadelphia early the same afternoon.

N. B. Splendid new Troy coaches furnished on extra at all times in any direction. Apply at E. EVANS'S,

July 21—tf